Letters

Letters to the editor are welcome. While there is no limit on the number of words, please write only enough material to adequately cover the subject. Anonymous letters are not acceptable, although names may be withheld on request.

Dear Editor:

I would like to thank the staff for their article concerning animal control and the SPCA, recently in the Pine Cone.

There are a few things I would like to add regarding my job as animal control officer for the City of Carmel. Although a part of my job is writing citations for violations of our dog ordinances such as licensing, the leash law, nuisance and sanitary laws; this is only a small part. Problems involving any animal, bird or insect are referred to me and on matters which I cannot handle, either the SPCA, the Department of Agriculture or the Department of Health are ready with information and help.

My interpretation of animal control, is that the officer should help the public with the control of their animals, not just enforcement of the laws. After many years experience teaching people to train their own dogs, and taking care of different kinds of animals, I can usually help when there is a behavior or confinement problem.

Granted, some individual animals are much more difficult to handle and care for than others, but if the owner will just call me and let me know his problem, there should be a solution. Anyone who has any questions about the animal ordinances is welcome to call me at the police department. I'll be glad to explain them.

An animal control officer that can help alleviate hard feelings between people over animals has done a good turn for the animals, which is what I feel my job is all about.

Animal Control Officer,

Dear Editor:

I usually find myself in warm agreement with our excellent Mayor, Bernard Anderson. Consequently, I am sorry that Mayor Anderson was not able to study the Political Reform Initiative being sponsored by Common Cause before coming to the erroneous conclusions in "The Mayor's Report" column in last week's Pine Cone.

Common Cause is indeed, as the mayor says, a "worthy organization," totally non-partisan in nature and supported by a flood-tide of eminently respectable supporters concerned with improving the effectiveness and responsiveness of government, both national and state.

It was principally Common Cause which led the struggle for political reform in our state's legislature, and it was only when the legislature refused to undertake its own reform that Common Cause reluctantly determined it must turn to the ultimate resort of the initiative so that the basic issue of "opening up the system" could be submitted to the people directly for decision.

The proposed Political Reform Initiative which will be circulated for signatures during this and succeeding weeks was most carefully drawn by political and legal experts of both major parties, to be sure that it would be both fair and legally sound in addition to accomplishing its aim of "letting the people know."

With specific regard to the section of the Initiative relating to "Conflicts of Interest," which is the only section to which Mayor Anderson addresses himself in his column: this section was meticulously drafted precisely to comply with the objections of the court to the previous law in this area.

The Initiative sponsored by Common Cause is very careful to relate its disclosure requirements narrowly to those assets pertinent to the official duties of our public servants, and to no others. Such disclosures, when required, are in general rather than specific terms, and their extent is likewise general, being stated as "over $10,000" and "over $100,000" in value.

Furthermore, returning to Mayor Anderson's comments, these disclosures relate primarily to elected officials. In the case of state and local "agencies" not all positions are to be included; each agency is required to develop its own "code," which will specifically designate those positions or jobs where conflict of interest could be a potential problem, and where therefore disclosure of holdings should be required.

I believe that, now the full text of the proposed Common Cause Initiative is available, Mayor Anderson will conclude that there should be no deterrent to anyone who desires to offer his services for the public good in whatever office or position. If anything, the built-in safeguards in the proposed initiative may be too liberal in permitting evasion rather than public spirited compliance.

The essential point is that, as Mayor Anderson says, "It takes a good deal of public spirit even now for individuals to take on the admittedly arduous chores of office in any of our small communities," and that the Initiative sponsored by Common Cause is meticulously designed to recognize this while at the same time defending the public welfare from the occasional conflict of interest abuses we have all seen from time to time.

Dear Editor:

When some good-hearted American espouses a nice cause, what often happens? Let us say he urges the "servant of the people" - our government - to really serve the public? To help upgrade the standard of living of the many millions of elderly having rough going. To rescue the honest poor and low income folks from being ill-housed, ill-fed, ill-clothed, and ill-looked-after in their health needs?

Does not someone sooner or later come up with the question: "Where is all the money coming from?" Usually in a voice of derision, but sometimes in a genuine desire to know? And practically always the question is asked by someone affluent, getting along very nicely, obviously.

Does such a man or woman ever say to themselves, as they view someone in distress: "There but for the grace of God, go I?" Oh, how concerned such people are on where the money is coming from to help their honest fellow-men struggling to keep their heads above water!

Yet one will never hear a peep out of them when staggering astronomical sums -- in their awesome totality, in their effect on the economy, on inflation, on raising the national debt to most fearful peaks -- are wasted on stupid and terrible projects, by men in high authority who are morally incompetent! Watch as you will, concentrate, cock one's ear and try to detect even the faintest whisper that sounds like: "Where is the money coming from?" Apparently they condone such enormous sums thrown away!

Are they disturbed? Do they lose their sense of speech, why can't they utter "Where is the money coming from," when these things occur? Many billions are wasted on useless weapons, on military might so great that our land has the power to obliterate all of humanity many times over, yet feels ever more insecure and the need to squander endless more billions on weapons, thus helping greatly to perpetuate the world armaments race. Foreign and military aid abroad ends up on black markets often, or otherwise makes very fat the Swiss bank accounts of dictators and assorted government leaders of nations.

Will the questioners, of help to fellow Americans in need, exclaim: "Where is the money coming from?" when the huge booze bills of the State Department and other government officials come due? When the unnecessary cloak-and-dagger activities of the Central Intelligence Agency, that cost a fortune, is budgeted? When the over-staffed bureaucracy of gigantic government is not whittled down to efficiency size, adds countless billions to cost of government? When tremendous sums are squandered on going to the moon, then to probe Mars, and will continue on and on as we are propagandized on the crying need to go to Jupiter, go to this or that galaxy, to probe - if possible - as may of the galaxies we can - cost what it may, bankrupt us though it will?

Will the ones who refrain from asking: "Where's the money coming from?", except when help to the elderly is proposed, speak up, ask the question a thousand times, when an impulsive, arrogant, and heady-with-power occupant of the White House gets us involved in a far off civil strife such as in Korea and Vietnam?

Do they know that an economist, about a year ago, estimated that if the Vietnam involvement was over immediately then, America will still pay out a total of $1 trillion - a thousand billion - by year 2000 as a result of that war alone? Where is all the money coming from, indeed!

Have some of our people become so affluent, so unfeeling, so tough that they are all-out for expenditures for nastiness and far fetched ventures, but none for constructive, helpful works? Is the question "Where is the money coming from," a magician's deck of cards, now you see it and now you don't?

Dear Editor:

The Sept. 20 edition of the Pine Cone included a poem by Phyllis Pasqualetti of San Francisco, telling her impressions of the squalor and misery of the fine Nepalese people. I am writing to correct her inaccurate reporting.

Although the Nepalese income is low by our standards so is their cost of living and both are much better than in neighboring countries. Kathmandu, the capitol, can be reached by any tourist by jet flight. It is no more typical of Nepal than any of our principal cities is typical of our entire country.

About two years ago my wife and I made a foot-trek in the Himalayas. Before taking off for the high country we spent a week or more in Kathmandu and upon returning from our trek spent more time there. By Asian standards the people are happy, industrious and clean.

We met a few beggars but nothing remotely approaching the numbers in India. In fact, beyond Kathmandu the children play at being beggars. Several times on our trek we'd meet little groups who'd giggle, hold out their hands and say "hundred rupee." (The Nepalese rupee is worth approximately 10 cents.) To see what would happen I'd produce my wallet and they would scatter like quail, laughing heartily at having apparently made me believe that they actually were begging.

I was obliged to carry a substantial amount of currency on our trek, in small denominations and therefore bulky. Our crew consisted of two Sherpas from the successful Japanese ascent of Everest and four Nepalese porters. I openly placed my money in my pack sack and, since I was loaded with camera gear, gave my pack to one of the porters. No problems at all.

Ours was a happy little group. The going was strenuous and occasionally hazardous. Our men pitched our camps neatly and efficiently, telling jokes in their own language and laughing heartily. Our camp at Goropodni was drenched for thirty-six hours by the unexpected return of the monsoon. Wet and chilled as they were they would somehow manage to build a bit of fire and give us hot "tea-coffee" and, they still laughed.

The Gurkah soldiers of Nepal are among the finest fighting men in the world. The Tibetan refugees have fine manners, dignified bearing and a grim determination (presently hopeless) to recover their beloved country from the Red Chinese.

The Sherpas are a relatively small group who migrated from Tibet about 80 years ago and live in a valley named Sherpa. There are no finer mountain men in the world. No successful mountaineering expedition in Nepal would ever have made it (and here I quote Ed Hillary) without the Sherpas.

This is Khatmandu.
This is Nepal.
I have no more alms to give.
Oh God! I have not near enough alms to give.

Speaking of charity, let's be charitable to Ms. Pasqualetti.

Carmel school district takes the lead

(Editorial)

By ROBERT MISKIMON

THE CARMEL Unified School District has distinguished itself in the community and among educators as one of the most competent, innovative districts in the state.

This, like so many other things in the Carmel area, can be easily taken for granted.

The early childhood education pilot program at River School reported on in last week's Pine Cone is but one example of the types of programs which have earned the district its reputation.

There are others, as well, including the system of teaching aides who are parents, offering their expertise to the classroom teacher, not to mention the superior program offered at Bay School to pre-schoolers.

The thrust of the new pilot program for early childhood education is the individualization of instruction, a goal which has been publicly stated as that of both Supt. Harris Taylor and Vance Frazier, Carmel River School Principal.

WHILE THE individualization of instruction is not exactly considered the "new wave" in education that it once was several years ago, the Carmel Unified School District, under Taylor's leadership, has taken great strides in this direction.

One of the most pressing needs of the district continues to be a solution to housing problems, which consist of overcrowding of Carmel High School at the same time enrollment is increasing, and stable or decreasing enrollment at the middle school and elementary school levels.

A speedy solution to this problem, which already has been spelled out in the form of a switch of the high school to the middle school, and the middle school to the high school, could get this monkey off the backs of the school board and administration so fuller energies could be devoted to an already-superior instructional program.

The district is fortunate, too, in having good teachers, who are, after all, the backbone of any school district.

With the continued support and involvement of parents, and the forceful direction of the administration, the Carmel Unified School District can only continue to improve and to meet the needs of the community.

Area planners debate Odello land purchase

THE MONTEREY PENINSULA Area Planning Commission heard Thomson J. Hudson of Point Lobos propose a scheme that would save the west side of the Odello artichoke fields from development and keep the land in open space.

Hudson said the Carmel Sanitary District may be interested in using the lands for effluent disposal pending the outcome of a six month study that will soon be undertaken.

The district board of directors passed a resolution two weeks ago stating it would be in favor of purchasing Odello land along with other parties if warranted by the study.

"We have been unable for some time to get a meeting of this kind together," said Hudson.

Hudson reasoned that along with Carmel Sanitary District funds, Odello Land aquisition money totaling about $200,000 and the city of Carmel's pledge to donate $100,000, there could be an availability of federal funds. Hudson urged the city of Carmel to double their donation.

The commission set a meeting for today at 7:30 p.m. in the Monterey Council Chambers to get cleared up many questsions it had at last week's meeting.

The parcel under consideration was zoned by the county board of supervisors last winter for a 300-unit hotel and 298 residential units,an action subsequently challenged in law-suits still pending in Superior Court.

The Odello property, west of Highway 1, a total of 157 acres, is to be purchased by the state for approximately $1.8 million and leased back to the Odello family for about 15 years under a bill approved by the state legislature in recent weeks. The bill is on Governor Reagan's desk for his signature.

One of the questions that arose last week was whether the state will require that the purchase be financed in part through some $200,000 contributed or pledged earlier in a fund drive conducted by OLAF. If not, the money would be available to help purchase the ranch land on the other side of the highway. Carmel's contribution of $100,000 may also be affected.

Carmel Sanitary District Chairman Earl Moser told the commission the study is projected to take six months. He pledged to get any definitive information to the commission as soon as possible.

Hudson warned of a time problem, referring to what he called the imminent final negotiations involving the Odellos, a Kansas City, Mo., development firm and Del Monte Properties Co.

Hudson, an attorney who has been advocating the land disposal idea for years, stressed that he was not representing the Odello brothers.

"The Odellos have used primary treatment water for many years," Hudson said. "It was not as clean as the water from the new plant."

"The Odellos have held their land off the market for over three years," Hudson continued.

"They have searched high and low for some someone who would protect the area. We find ourselves tonight meeting in an atmosphere that makes for a positive approach. We have the wherewithal to save the eastern side of the Odello lands."

"We can't expect the sanitary district to purchase the land for purposes of open space, so we ask them to pursue the tests on the land that will support our contention. I'm here to tell you it can be done with fairness to the property owners. We don't have to write off the area to development. We can accomplish our purpose by paying the fair market value for the land."

"We do have a binding contract with the Odellos," said James Glazer Jr., president of Del Monte Realty Co.

"What we want to know, Jim, is will you knock it off for six months? That calls for a yes or no answer. Do I hear an answer?" said Hudson.

"You hear no answer," Glazer said.

GLAZER ADDED "We have tried to cooperate with the sanitary district and will continue to cooperate with them. We have no agreement from the Odellos to hold up development."

Hudson suggested throughout the night that Del Monte Properties delay their final negotiations, before coming up with a "no comment" answer from Glazer.

"The questsion of disposal came up again last December," said sanitary district board member James Pruitt. "The developer said at that time he would be willing to stand aside. The Odellos would like to see the land stay open but they are not under the gun."

Pruitt added the board felt in December that a study didn't "make sense but now we're involved in a new study and the Odellos are very cooperative."

Moser added the situation differed last December in that the whole east-west portion of the Odello lands would have had to be purchased with "a good portion of the burden falling on the sanitary district."

"All efforts to save the western part of the Odello property will be empty without the purchase of the eastern part," said commission chairman Robert Franco of Del Rey Oaks.

In voicing Carmel's view, Mayor Bernard Anderson told the commission "the city was interested in the whole 292 acres."

"The city has got a big stake in the areas surrounding the city," said Anderson.

"Two years ago if you talked greenbelt people thought you were a Green Panther or something. We don't want another Los Angeles of Santa Cruz boardwalk. We are coming dangerously close to killing the goose that laid the golden egg. If the east side goes, it is a questsion of dominoes."

Interest was also expressed by Gary Tate, general manager of the Monterey Peninsula Regional Park and Open Space District. While he brought no commitment from the district board, Tate said: "The district has limited funds (about $350,000 annually) but is willing to work with other agencies in exploring alternatives."

Mrs. Billie Barton of Seaside summed up two main questions:

-- Exactly what does the bill on Governor Reagan's desk mean in relation to OLAF and Carmel city funds? Are they included in $1.8 million going toward purchase of the west side?

-- Can the developers be stalled in their negotiations while the sanitary district makes their study?

"We applaud the concept," said Dr. Edward Marcucci. "But we would be voting on something that is in a very grey area relating to facts."

All commissioners concurred with this view.

Planners unceremoniously adopt general plan update

WITH LITTLE fanfare, the Carmel Planning Commission approved and sent to the city council the first update of Carmel's General Plan since its creation in 1959.

"With all the publicity on this, I'm rather disappointed that no one came to discuss this in public hearing," said Commissioner Robert Evans at the Sept. 19 meeting.

The plan was updated this past summer by Assistant Planning Director Betsy McLeod. Every year, the plan states, the commission would review and submit a report on any changes pertaining to the plan. Also, a thorough updating is recommended to take place every five years.

Design review approval for the Carmel Town House was delayed because of unresolved parking problems within the plan. The commission did not have a revised plan by architect James Pruitt and felt it was unable to act with the only original plans to make a decision.

The commission decided to continue the matter.

Discussing problems relating to Carmel's building moratorium, Chairman Fred Keeble stated that the commission seemed to be in accord with all proposed ordinance changes with the exception of how to go about imposing height limitations. Commissioner Henry Hill disagreed.

"I'm greatly concerned that we are approaching the midpoint in this moratorium," said Hill.

"We have some obligation to the present and to the future," Hill continued. "The city council has expressed concern that we consider physical spacing requirements for motels. We have agreed not to halt construction on all motels, we have said there is a better way to do this."

"What is the better way?" Hill asked. "No one has come up with a way of doing what the moratorium has struck at. The way it stands now, it will look as if we have done nothing at all."

"Number one, the moratorium was a chance to study our requirements," said Keeble. "There is not a universal desire within the city council to halt motel building. Eliminating additional uses has made it much more difficult to build a motel. We are looking for a better way of controlling development."

An ad hoc committee of Hill, Keeble and Edward Neroda was appointed to study building height and story requirements. Further discussion on moratorium-related ordinances was scheduled.

The commission approved material and coloring plans for the store fronts of the Carmel Plaza, which is currently under construction.

"The new application we have received is much better than the original of which we did not approve," said Keeble. "The effect of the new plans is to individualize buildings rather than to make it seem as one uniform development."

Architect Ralph Butterfield explained the new proposal calling for a variety of materials such as natural wood and brick to be used on store fronts. The approval passed unanimously, with Commissioner Charles McEwen absent.

Sunset Center was granted permission to hold its third annual Homecrafter's Marketplace. The center will lease out space in the Sunset parking lot for Carmel artists and craftsmen to display their wares.

GEORGE WALKER was granted an amendment to his use permit to allow the driveway for his building sites to be located on one of his four lots at Crespi Avenue and Flanders Way.

An application for a variance to allow a one-foot encroachment into the front setback for Helen Hink on Monte Verde Street between 9th Avenue and 10th Avenue was withdrawn by the applicant when it was found an encroachment was not needed.

The commission approved amendments to the A-1 theatrical zone where the Golden Bough Theater is located. The amendments stipulated that residential zoning requirements would apply within the A-1 zone from now on.

"As I see the intent, if the building was to burn down it would be impossible to rebuild it," said Evans.

"If the building were destroyed, we would have to rezone," said Keeble.

The commission gave Howard Brunn of the Seven Arts Court on the southwest corner of Ocean Avenue and Lincoln Street permission to remove an existing deck wall and replace it with a planter box.

The commission approved a county referral for construction of the Stanley Appliance store on Carmel Ranch Phase III.

Once again, the commission continued an ordinance amortizing nonconforming kitchens in the residential district for more study because the wording of the ordinance was unclear.

"Although we have spent 324 ½ hours on this," joked Keeble, "I think it sould be continued for more study."

The commission referred a request from the city council to consider prohibiting further installation of bar sinks in guest houses to the Land Use Committee.

Also referred to the Land Use Committee was a request of the city council to consider eliminating R-1/P-3 zoning. These are special parking zones within the residential district.

The commission approved signs for Keith Jackson of The Natural Impulse on Mission Street between 5th Avenue and 6th Avenue and the Court of the Golden Eagle on Lincoln Street between Ocean Avenue and 7th Avenue.

Robert Beck of The Learning Company on 5th Avenue between Mission Street and Junipero Street had his application continued.

Deen Rowe of Phillip Rowe, Ltd. on the corner of San Carlos Street and Ocean Avenue was given approval for three signs pending the removal of letters on one existing sign.

Marcolli's Arco on the corner of San Carlos Street and 7th Avenue was denied a request for a sign.

Phillip Cogbill of Clockmaker of Carmel on San Carlos Street between 5th Avenue and 6th Avenue was given conditional approval on the basis that the proposed sign be reduced in size.

Helen Sterns of the Vestibule on Lincoln Street between Ocean Avenue and 7th Avenue was given approval for one sign, and denied another.

Howard Healy of the Town House Lodge on the corner of 5th Avenue and San Carlos Street had his sign application continued.

Cypress Gifts on the corner of Dolores Street and 7th Avenue was given approval for an awning.

Friends of the Library book sale is next week

The Friends of the Harrison Memorial Library will hold its annual two-day Book Sale at the Sunset Center in Carmel on Friday and Saturday, Oct. 5 and 6.

The sale of more than 5,000 surplus books from the Harrison Memorial Library will be held in Room 20 at Sunset Center from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Friday and 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturday.

The second day will see a fresh addition of books to the sale tables. The Friends of the Harrison Memorial Library, a volunteer group who will staff the sale, invite all browsers and bibliophiles to examine this better-than-ever collection of bargain books.

Prices start at 10 cents. Also featured will be a Browser's Corner where shoppers may sit and enjoy literature and free coffee at the same time.

Head Librarian Vicki Anderson Jones has disclosed that among the sale specials will be two complete editions of the Encyclopaedia Brittanica -- 11th and 13th, a first edition Hemingway, a charming volume of "Messages and Papers of the Presidents" published in the early 19th Century, and, for nostalgia-buffs, a memorial volume of President McKinley's assassination. Also featured: a bigger children's book section and a "reference and rarities" table.

"This is a wonderful opportunity for everyone to replenish their home libraries", says Mrs. Janet Gaasch, newly-elected president of the Friends. She adds that new members of the Friends will be welcomed and may sign up during the sale.

Those wishing to donate books for the sale should bring them to the Harrison Memorial Library before Oct. 3, where they will be gratefully received.

All proceeds will go toward the support of the library.

Musicians suit goes to trial

A musicians' lawsuit to overturn Carmel's ban on live music in public places where drinks are served has been set for trial Nov. 8 in Superior Court in Monterey.

The suit was filed several months ago by Local 616 of the American Federation of Musicians, which attacks the prohibition on several constitutional grounds, including alleged violations of free speech and equal protection.

Cultural Commission authorizes three dance shows

Riley asked for and got $6,000 from the city council during the summer's budget sessions to put on "quality road shows" at Sunset Auditorium.

Burch Manns' Americana Dance Theater with Jimmie Rogers will appear on Tuesday night, Jan. 15.

Jose Molina's Bailes Espanoles Spanish dance company will be booked for Wednesday night, March 27. The Bay Area Repertory Dance Theater, with David Wood directing, will perform on Wednesday night, May 8.

Tickets will be $10 for all three shows or $4.75 for individual shows. Riley said tickets would be between $7 and $10 to see any of the shows in San Francisco.

"We are getting two of them at half of their ordinary charge because they will happen to be in the area at these times," Riley said.

Riley expressed the hope that the entire $6,000 can be made up by ticket sales enabling the commission to give the money back to the council.

"Seeing the reaction to the Oakland Ballet this summer, I feel there is a lot of interest in dance in this area," Riley added.

The commission also approved Monterey Peninsula College to show a historical film series, "The Heritage of Egypt" on six Friday afternoons starting on Oct. 26 and running through Dec. 7. The Sunset Center will be co-sponsor.

Rent will be the usual $50 mimimum charge per performance unless the sale of tickets is under 200, in which case rent will be $25 per performance.

"I would like to work with MPC more closely since they have resources I do'nt have," said Riley. "Perhaps we could do other things on a co-sponsorship basis."

The afternoon programming is an experiment to find whether Carmelites will support such programs.

"I believe there are many people in Carmel who don't go out at night who would come to these shows," Riley said.

The commission also approved the use of the Marjorie Evans Gallery by the Friends of Photography from Nov. 19 to Dec. 30 for a special show. The group will pay $60 to Sunset Center, a sum which is half of direct additional costs for keeping the gallery open on six weekends. The gallery is not normally open on weekends.

The commission recommended to the city council that it have the gutters on Sunset Center cleaned at a cost of $475. The commission considered removing the gutters on the eastern side of Sunset but the cost of $1,800 was considered too excessive.

The commission approved the rental of 320 square feet of scene dock space to the Forest Theater Guild from Sept. 22 through Feb. 22 of next year. The cost to the Guild will be $80 for the five months.

Arrangements after Feb. 22 will be determined when the new contract for the 1974-75 year is negotiated.

Opera tickets still available

Monterey Peninsula College Community Service Office offers the only remaining tickets for the San Francisco Opera season.

MPC will present, on this first excursion, San Francisco Opera Co.'s performance of Mozart's Cosi Fan Tutte. The performance will be held on Oct. 10, and the deadline for tickets is tomorrow.

Tickets are available for $25, which includes bus transportation to and from San Francisco plus a reserved orchestra seat.

Opera critic from the San Francisco Chronicle, Gerald Adams, will present a lecture designed to guide participants into the world of opera, to be held one week prior to the excursion.

For more information and registration, call the MPC Community Services Office at 375-9821, ext. 335.

WORRIED ABOUT THE WATER SHORTAGE AND HIGH INTEREST RATES?

So are we.

We don't know yet just what effect it will have on the construction industry and the availability of housing. But we have some

GOOD NEWS!

WATER:

In SKYLINE FOREST, MPA paid for, and California-American Water Co. installed a 700,000 gallon tank, high on a hill West of Skyline Forest, which assures ample pressure and reserve for fire-fighting and any temporary shortage.

All of SKYLINE FOREST is served by extra large water mains -- many 12". Every lot has a copper service connection from the main in the street to the back of the curb. We even paid Calif.-American to install a concrete meter box on every lot. All that is left for you to do is to have Calif.-American install the water meter, and have your plumber run the service to your home. On all existing homes for sale, water is already connected.

CARMEL KNOLLS also has ample-sized mains and copper water service connections to the back of the curb on every lot, as well as concrete meter boxes.

INTEREST RATES:

The prime rate may have climbed to 10 percent

BUT NOT AT MPA.

HOMESITES: We are still selling MPA-owned lots in Skyline Forest and Carmel Knolls for 25 percent down and the balance at 8 percent, simple interest, no fees, no pay-off penalties, with your choice of 20-year, amortized loans, or 5 percent interest-only loans. (Annual percentage rate 8.0 percent).

EXISTING HOMES: On better homes, in desirable neighborhoods, we have a limited source of money at 8¾ percent - 30-year amortized, 2 percent loan fee - including appraisal - (Annual percentage rate 8.82 percent), and very favorable pay-off privileges, for minimum loans of $35,000 and maximum of $65,000. This rate applies only to homes where we are the listing or selling broker.

LOTS:

In Sunday's Herald, Sept. 23, Pat Griffith, staff writer said, "Prices on undeveloped lots in existing subdivision will skyrocket." Now is the time to buy in Skyline Forest and Carmel Knolls -- to build now, to hold and build later, or for investment. In Carmel Knolls, we have single-family lots from $10,000 to $24,000. In Skyline Forest, we still have single-family lots from $21,000 to $24,500. Sewer laterals, underground gas and electric run to the back of the curb; streets, curbs, gutters and storm drains are all in.

For further information, contact any of our staff listed below, at our main office listed below, open Mon.-Fri., 8-5, Sat., 9-12 or our Branch Office at Mountain Shadows, Skyline Forest, open every day 1-5 p.m.

REMEMBER WHEN?

50 YEARS AGO:

From The Pine Cone, Sept. 29, 1923

AN INDICATION of the growing populaton of Carmel with the traveling public, vacationers and diners out from nearby communities, is the announcement of John B. Jordon, proprietor of the Pine Inn, of his intention to add a large number of rooms to his hostelry.

Work on this proposed increase in accommodations will begin almost immediately.

Just at present, extensive alterations and repairs are underway in the kitchen, and new ranges and other equipment are to be installed. When the work is completed, under the direction of M.J. Murphy, work will begin on the new addition on the northwest portion of the present building.

Supplementing the foregoing improvements, he has plans, not definitely formulated, for erecting a number of cottages on his lots west of the Pine Inn.

Had Senator E.S. Rigdon and Frank H. Powers, whose big dream was that a magnificent standard highway be constructed from Carmel to San Simeon, been alive last Monday, they would have been overjoyed.

They would have heard Harvey M. Toy, president of the State Highway Commission, declare before 40 road enthusiasts gathered in San Francisco last Monday afternoon that he and his fellow commissioners were "sold" on the Carmel-San Simeon highway.

But the only way by which this desirable improvement can be attained and paid for is by another state bond issue.

When the Pollock and other contracts are completed, there will be no money available to complete the remaining 37 miles. In fact, the original $1.5 million and $200,000 in addition will be required to finish the present work under contract.

25 YEARS AGO:

From The Pine Cone, Sept. 24, 1948

THE CARMEL Planning Commission, in informal session Wednesday night, wrestled with the perennial problem of what to do with oversized trucks that deliver goods to Carmel merchants and provide about 90 percent of the complications to Carmel's traffic ills.

Under serious consideration is a change in the truck route so that heavy hauling will be diverted down Junipero Street from 4th Avenue to 8th Avenue. San Carlos Street, the route by which the trucks now enter town, is narrower than Junipero Street, already burdened with automobile traffic, and will be one of the main approaches to the Dolores Street School, to be built this winter.

"If we can get the trucks off San Carlos it will contribute to the safety of the kids walking to Dolores School, and that is one of the main reasons why we are studying the possibilities of routing the trucks down Junipero," Planning Commission Chairman P.A. McCreery told the Pine Cone yesterday.

"It looks feasible, but we aren't ready to make a recommendation until we get some information we have requested from the police department."

McCreery added that the commission is studying the parking situation of Dolores Street and Ocean. Avenue.

"The law prohibiting double parking must be enforced. It is not only a city ordinance but a state law. But we don't want to urge rigid enforcement until we have provided some relief to the situation that makes double parking necessary."

10 YEARS AGO:

From The Pine Cone, Sept. 26, 1963

DUE TO MISINFORMATION given the Pine Cone reporter slated to attend this meeting, we regret that we cannot give first-hand coverage to the address given last night by Dr. Herbert Neale, District Superintendent of the Methodist Church, at the Church of the Wayfarer, before the divided groups of the Wayfarer's congregation.

Upon contacting Dr. K. Fillmore Gray, minister of the Wayfarer, in advance of the meeting, our reporter was assured that the meeting, was "routine" orientation of "in-church" affairs ... completely non-controversial and without interest to the public, and that the press was not invited.

From an unimpeachable source, we learn as we go to press that, following Dr. Neale's address there were controversial speeches, questions and answers, from members of the church's divided congregation.

The split in the Church of the Wayfarer has been much publicized as to whether the church should go foreward as a non-sectarian, inter-denominational body, or, as Dr. K. Fillmore Gray and his followers advocate, be recognized as a Methodist Church with members of all Protestant churches welcomed at its services.

As we go to press we are unable to contact Dr. Gray for detailed information of last night's meeting as, we are told, he is in Palo Alto, attending the Nevada-Northern California Conference of Methodist ministers, a special meeting called by Methodist Bishop Donald H. Tippett.

Variety is the spice of art exhibits

A new work by S.C. Yuan dominates the Entrance Room this month at the Carmel Art Association.

Called "Sonnet," it is a large horizontal collage in soft colors complemented by two sculptures placed at either side. These are a ceramic "Stele" by Isabel Tavernetti and "Dryad" a wood sculpture by Fritz Abplanalp. Howard Bradford is represented by a serigraph in warm browns and greens, "Autumn Range No. 2," hung next to "Soundings No. 29" a mixed media by Molla.

Vern Yadon's "Sea Otters" at play sound a welcoming note as one enters the door, and the show in this room is completed with Ann Rugh's "Spring No. 3146" and two constructions by Isabel Tavernetti with an Indian theme, made of fur, leather and clay. Other sculpture is contributed by Bert Conaghan, Ken Wiese, and Beth Garcia.

The September show in the Small Picture Gallery was hung by Royden Martin, and includes mini-exhibits by Ann Rugh, who shows four paintings in oil of children, Dorothy Biggers' sketches of familiar landmarks done in ink and color wash, and several brilliant flower bouquets by Ardoth Terrill.

Also represented are William Timmins, with two landscapes, one of eucalyptus trees, and the other of horses peacefully grazing. Eve Tartar contrasts with her forceful constructions and equally interesting titles: "Static Red" and "Chorale," of wood; and "Cosmic Continuum" and "Network of Forming," made of paper.

In the realistic school are four oils by Royden Martin, of ballet dancers on gold foil background glowing like jewels, and in counterpoint, five Isabel Tavernetti paintings with an Indian mask motif are hung.

Also represented in this show are Linfold Donovan, Vern Yadon, Reed Farrington and William Stone, Jr. All galleries in the Carmel Art Association are open to the public every day.

Four French artists exhibit at Zantman Galleries

art and artists

Currently on exhibition at Zantman Galleries in Carmel is a four-man exclusive, all French, continuing through Oct. 27. The artists are: Jacques Eitel, Olivier Foss, Guy Cambier and Jacques Voyet.

Eitel's paintings are known for their use of bright colors in his tree-lined lakes, houses and farms (Le Port de Villeranche, Les Gerbes, etc.).

In 1942, he entered the art institute "Ecole Boule," graduating in 1945, after which he entered the Ecole des Beaux Arts in Paris.

The City of Paris bought one of his landscapes when he was 29 years old, and in 1957 he was given his first one-man exhibit in Paris. His renderings of the French landscape have since found their place in many exhibits in France and abroad.

He has painted in Italy, Spain, Algeria, Portugal, Holland, and other countries, but his main preoccupation remained with France and especially Bretagne.

Since then, Eitel has had one-man exhibits in Paris, London, and New York.

Oliver Foss, born in the United States in 1920, son of an American professor of philosophy and a French mother who was an artist, studied art in France for several years and became part of the French art scene, living in Paris and travelling extensively in Europe; Spain, Italy, Greece, where many of his paintings are done.

"DEUX SOEURS: Confidence" is now being exhibited at Zantman's, expressing his "way of the old masters."

His first one-man show in the United States in 1951 brought critics from the New York Herald Tribune and The Christian Science Monitor to say:

"Compositions by Oliver Foss are painted with vigor. The brush operates with vehemence, sometimes roughtly, exclamatory.

"For the most part, his canvasses are scenes of Paris done in a technique which recalls Vlaminck somewhat. Except that it is more brilliant in color."

Foss has been awarded the Medaille de la Ville de Paris, Laureat des Artistes Francaise, and Premier Prix, Monte Carlo. Among those works being exhibited at Zantman's are: La Montee A Phyra, Molina de Aragon, and Val der Robres.

Says Guy Cambier: "I think that a genuine painter must remain a respectful craftsman and keep in mind and in hand the quintessence of a marvelous heritage, the classical art which is a source of beauty and riches.

"I am a modern painter who expresses himself in the way of the old masters. I am also a regressive man, living inadvertently and certainly by mistake at the close of the 20th Century."

Cambier paints trees, skies, rivers, animals and fields in romantic fashion. And next to being an artist, he is an accomplished musician who plays the guitar and piano and composes classical music as well as "chansons" sung with his own voice.

Cambier was born in Belgium in 1923 and left his country about 30 years later to settle in France. His first one-man show in Belgium took place in 1942 and many more followed in the years between 1942 and 1955 when he departed for France.

In that same year, he obtained the award of the Jeune Peinture Mediterranee, having shown his paintings in the south of France.

His first one-man show in Paris followed in the year 1959, in one of Paris' oldest and most respected galleries, the Galerie Drouant-David. He received two more awards -- the "Ville de Paris" and the "Jacques Larue." Cambier has been extensively represented in the United States since 1967.

Jacques Voyet, whose work has been represented in the Zantman Galleries since 1966, started his art studies in Tours, France, at the School of Fine Arts and continued at the Ecole Nationale in Paris. At age 46, Voyet has exhibited in the finest galleries in Paris, London, Tokyo, and Carmel.

Voyet's work has been described as classical and personal, and yet modern. Exemplary works are "Brigitte," "Bords de Loire," "Le Vase Bleu," and "Le Clocher." He has been noted for his exceptional use of blue, or, as it came to be called, the "Voyet-blue."

The artist presently lives in a Gothic abbey at the border of the river Loire in France. One part of the old structure has been re-made into a studio.

'Never Too Late' provides a good laugh

Want a good laugh? Or two or three or four? Then we suggest you attend the Studio Theatre's latest production, "Never Too Late."

Based on the Broadway play by Sumner Arthur Long, the story concerns a middle-aged couple (with a married daughter), who suddenly discover they are about to become parents again.

As can be imagined in such a situation, the reactions of the principals are varied, and the laughs are plentiful.

Highlighting an excellent cast are Sam and Edie Karas, husband and wife in real life (and incidentially performing together for the 10th time at the Studio), playing the parts of the rather surprised parents-to-be. Experience tells, for these two performers are really very good, and exact all the laughs and sympathy required in their roles.

Harry Lambert, as played by Sam Karas, is loud, blustering and a trifle foolish in his reaction to the impending birth: his main concern is what "people will say." On the other hand, his wife, Edith (Edie Karas), is excited and rather touched that she is going to have a baby at her age.

Caught in the middle of this emotional tug-of-war are the Lamberts daughter, Kate (Tina Burz), and her husband, Charlie (Rod Allison), who find themselves just as surprised, not to mention a little mortified, at the news of the baby. Both actors have appeared in Studio productions before, and handle their roles with ease and professionalism.

Also appearing in the cast are ex-mayor Barney Laiolo, doing what comes naturally in his part of the mayor; Lee Brady as Edith's best friend, Grace Kimbrough; John Sullivan as Mr. Foley, a contractor; and Donald Meharry, Jr. as a policeman.

There are many good one-liners in the play, and thanks to the direction of Morgan Stock, the pace is fast and seldom lets down. Special mention must be made of Robert Evans, Jr., who is celebrating his 60th production with the Studio. He has designed especially attractive sets for the play, and has also re-designed the interior of the theatre. Roberta Little is again stage manager for the show.

"Never Too Late" will be playing at the Studio through Nov. 3. The theatre is located on Dolores between Ocean and 7th. For reservations phone 624-1661.

G.K.Q.

"GUESS WHO'S COMING to dinner in nine months?" asks Edith (Edie Karas) to her surprised husband and father-to-be, Harry (Sam Karas), in Carmel's Studio Theatre production of "Never Too Late." Middle-aged parenthood and lots of laughs are the order of the day in the play which will be appearing at the Studio through Nov. 3.

Symphony tickets still available

Season tickets for Monterey County Symphony's 1973-74 series have been mailed to all Carmel and Monterey subscribers, and although the Carmel series is sold out, good reserved seats are still available for the Monterey and Salinas series.

The first set of concerts features Nina Sapieyevski, a young Polish concert pianist. Haymo Taeuber, conductor and music director, has chosen Bela Bartok's Piano Concerto No. 3 for her solo performance with the orchestra. Wagner's Tannhaeuser Overture opens the concert, and the ever popular Pastorale Symphony by Beethoven completes the program.

Solo artists during the season besides Miss Sapieyevski, will be Henri Honegger, violoncellist; Stuart Canin, violinist; Marian Marsh, soprano; Valentin Gheorghiu, pianist; and the Monterey Peninsula Choral Society with the Orchestra for the May concert set.

The prime attraction, however, is the orchestra and its distinguished conductor, Haymo Taeuber, now beginning his sixth season with the symphony.

Under the leadership of Haymo Taeuber, the orchestra has achieved Metropolitan status, joining 78 other American orchestras in this category. Accolades for its excellence have been received from music critics.

The 70-member orchestra serves the Central Coast area, presenting concerts in Monterey, Carmel and Salinas. The first concert set opens in Monterey at Monterey Peninsula College's gym auditorium, Sunday, Oct. 14. The performance is repeated Monday in Carmel and Tuesday in Salinas. All concerts are at 8 p.m.

During the season, six concert sets are performed in the regular concert series in October, November, January, February, March and May.

For a detailed brochure and ticket application, please call the symphony office, 624-8511.

'Your Show of Shows'

Max Liebman's "Ten From Your Show of Shows," currently playing at the Valley playing at the Valley Cinema, is a nostalgic re-run of television's mid-50 era with Sid Caesar, Imogene Coca, Carl Reiner and Howard Morris slap-sticking it up on the screen.

The movie, produced by Max Liebman, was written by Mel Tolkin, Lucile Kallen, Mel Brooks, Sid Caesar and Liebman, returns ten of the zaniest half hour shows from the old television series of the 50's, and brings back to the public hilarious moments from the early days of televsion.

Gene Shalit, televsion's latest look-alike of Groucho Marx, and television and movie critic; TIME Magazine, the New York Times, Judith Crist, Roger Greenspun to name a few critics, highly rate the movie.

This is the first of several screenings which will be shown at the Valley Cinema during the next few weeks.

Fortunately, the comedy series has been preserved for future generations through the development of kinescope, an early forerunner of today's video tape. Many of television's pioneer programs are lost to posterity because the technique was not yet developed.

At Monterey Jazz Festival

A nostalgic return to the 1940s jazz era

By ROBERT MISKIMON

THE 16th Monterey Jazz Festival made it clear that America's nostalgia craze has found its way into the jazz world.

The result was a revival of some of the most basic and beautiful forms of jazz -- the blues, scat, tap dancing, and the harmonies of bebop.

The tone of this year's festival was set at Friday's opening concert, with the fantastic, 1940-ish Pointer Sisters, the Buddy Rich Orchestra, and "Piano Playhouse," a steamroller group which included Billy Taylor, Toshiko Akiyoshi, John Lewis, and Ellis Larkins.

So much already has been said in print about the Pointer Sisters that cliches are difficult to avoid. Suffice it to say that this foursome of talented preacher's daughters from Oakland may be the quintessential embodiment of the current trend in jazz to look back on the post-World War II era.

The Pointer Sisters wear 1940s Minnie Mouse-style dresses, with outrageous feathered, jeweled hats, and generate enough electricity while on stage to solve the nation's energy crisis.

More important than their dress is their singing, which includes scat singing reminiscent of the era they reflect, but improved with innovative harmonies, and elements of Lambert, Hendricks and Ross-type unison riffs, spiced with unexpected pleasures, such as throat-clicking suggestive of Miriam Makeba.

Their vocal origins were underscored when Jon Hendricks himself joined them for a swinging scat set which electrified the audience.

One is struck, while listening to the Pointer Sisters, with their similarity to the 1940s idiom, but at the same time with the fact they are artists in their own right, having borrowed what they need to create, from themselves, a unique conception of the jazz idiom.

Their appearance at the 1973 Monterey Jazz Festival could well go down in the annals of jazz as the official date when the bebop era was revived in spirit.

This impression was reinforced, as a tap-dancing foursome including Baby Lawrence, Buster Brown, Chuck Green, and John T. McPhee performed "percussive jazz" indroductions to the various main events Friday night and Saturday afternoon.

Tap dancing is all but a dying art form, and its apparent revival at Monterey is a credit to Jimmy Lyons, festival founder and manager, and to those who helped to bring them. Their dancing made it clear that tap dancing is a creative, expressive idiom in the very mainstream of jazz.

The Clare Fischer Quintet played good, solid, blues-rooted jazz Friday night, with Fischer himself playing a space-age electric piano, the Yamaha EX-42. For those attuned to electronic devices in music, it may have been a significant event. For those old-fashioned jazz purists who believe a piano should sound like a piano, Fischer might as well have played a motorcycle throttle, for all the music that was generated.

BUDDY RICH'S big band played an awsome variety of pieces Friday night, from Latin-flavored, to hard-driving arrangements reminiscent of the Benny Goodman era, and back to the 1970s harmonies of today's jazz, all fueled by the precision of Rich's drumming.

The impression created at Friday's concert was carried forward emphatically at the Saturday afternoon concert.

Opening with the blues singer, Mance Lipscomb, who did "traditional" (if the blues can be called that) songs, accompanying himself on guitar, the program brought on Jimmy Rogers and his Chicago Blues Band, which played good, old boogie, and which was enthusiastically received by the audience.

The Dave Alexander Trio also followed suit, in a bluesy, boogie set which got people up in the aisles and on their feet.

Bo Diddley brought the house down; whether his music, which hasn't changed much since the late 1950s, can be considered "jazz" is an academic question. It is what used to be called "rock and roll," but that genre, as everyone knows, is an outgrowth of the blues -- a basic jazz form.

Controlled pandemonium was the order of the day Saturday afternoon, as couples danced jubilantly in the warm sunshine on chairs, in the aisles, and practically everywhere to the infectuous Bo Diddley beat.

A return to bebop was provided by Eddie "Cleanhead" Vinson, a veteran jazzman who has appeared in previous years at Monterey. His alto saxophone playing is in a league with the bebop era strongly identified with Charlie Parker.

Saturday night was "Bird Night" -- a tribute to the late genius, Charlie "Bird" Parker, who, with Dizzy Gillespie, can practically be said to have invented "modern" jazz in the late 1940s. The inclusion of "Bird Night" on the program again re-emphasized the resurgence of interest in jazz of this era.

Supersax, a group consisting of five saxophones, trumpet, bass, drums and piano, started Saturday night's show with their musical revival of Charlie Parker. Their style of playing involves the literal transcription of Bird's improvised choruses as the basis for their own improvisations.

The premise is that Bird's solos, although based on other, written melodies, were of such originality that they amounted to new compositions in their own right. Supersax is a competent group of musicians with a polished sound.

Dizzy Gillespie's Quintet, redictably, provided one of two high points in the Saturday night concert -- the other being the appearance of the Modern Jazz Quartet. The MJQ and Dizzy Gillespie have almost become Monterey institutions in themselves: Dizzy playing his variety of music from the Spanish-flavored to free form jazz, and the MJQ doing their refined, subtle music of surpassing brilliance.

The reverence of the audience toward the MJQ was apparent when, during one composition, half of the quartet clapped their hands rhythmically, and the audience joined in, but clapping quietly, as suited the mood of the music.

Maybe it was the rain Saturday night, which could have dampened the spirits, but Carmen McRae, who generally galvanizes an audience, came across as lukewarm, although there certainly can be no quarrel with the quality of her voice: the lack was probably one of inspiration.

And, as always, the Sunday afternoon concert presented "Jazz Stars of Today and Tomorrow," including some of the best young jazz talent around. This year's program included the Corona High School Jazz Band, the Grant Union High School Jazz Combo, and the California All-Star High School Jazz Band.

"Family Night," Sunday, was a showcase for several multi-talented groups, the most outstanding of which were three Heath boys -- Percy, bassist with the Modern Jazz Quartet; Tootie, a versatile drummer; and Jimmy, gifted saxophonist. The three left no doubts as to their musical ability, and raised speculation as to what kind of swinging, family reunions the Heath family must have.

The Turrentine Boys, as they were billed, included tenor saxophonist Stanley Turrentine and his brother Tommy Turrentine, trumpeter. Both men competent jazzman, but Stanley shone with elan and precision as he wove intricate and hard-driving solos, also suffused with bop feeling.

The Candoli brothers -- Pete on trumpet, and Conte ("Count") on trumpet -- also put in an outstanding performance in Sunday's Family Night.

A particularly beautiful and promising one-number gig was that of Stacy Rowles, the 18-year-old trumpeter daughter of pianist and composer Jimmy Rowles. Both appeared together with a rhythm section, and parent pride was evident after Stacy's dreamy, wistful solo, which brought loud cheers. The crowd obviously wanted more than just once piece.

The 16th Monterey Jazz Festival lived up to its well-deserved reputation, despite a steam-roller start Friday night, which peaked Saturday afternoon.

As a social event, too, it left most everyone waiting, ready for next year's festival.

Sunset views:

September is month of plans

By FRANK H. RILEY, director
Community and Cultural Activities

SEPTEMBER HAS BEEN a month of planning at Sunset Center.

This planning covers many areas. For example you have read in the Pine Cone of our schedule of classes. (You can still sign up if you call soon.) These cover a wide area of interests, and everyone is welcome to enroll.

At the same time, we have scheduled a series of interesting exhibits for the foyer of Sunset Center Theatre. Organizations who use the theatre are invited to arrange some of the exhibits while others are arranged by special invitation from this office. The result, hopefully,is a diversified group of displays for the enjoyment of all who attend events in the theatre.

Plans are now also firmed up for a series of seven major exhibits in the Marjorie Evans Gallery. During our first year of operation of the gallery, we had to feel our way and experiment. Now, with some accumulated experience, we feel we are better prepared to offer the city a really fine program.

Exhibits include paintings, tapestries, graphics, posters and more. The current exhibit is a group of 40 prints by young African artists and wi" be well worth a visit.

Other planning includes a Sunset Center Dance Festival with performances by three of the country's best dance companies. Details of this program and how to attend will be forthcoming.

We have just announced the Third Annual Homecrafters' Marketplace event to take place in our parking lot on Saturday, Nov. 17. Applications for space will be accepted Oct. 15.

And, an especially exciting plan just completed is for the free noon-time movies in Room 20 every Tuesday beginning on Oct. 2.

Aside from program planning, we are also deep in plans for the remodeling of Room 4 to make it more usable as a community room accommodating not only meetings and seminars but also social events such as bridge parties, receptions, and the like. Gifts to the center make this remodeling possible, and contemplated bequests will soon make similar improvements to Room 3 possible.

Concurrently, we are completing a major re-doing of the old electrical system to correct many irregularities and defects. You will at least notice our new emergency lights in the theatre. Most of the rest of the work is behind the walls.

Other building and maintenance planning includes the improvement of the central parking area; a newly designed planting area along the West side of the theatre building (this planned and to be constructed by the local chapter of the California Native Plant Society); new landscaping along the Mission Street area, as well as numerous repair jobs to restore, strengthen, and improve various areas of the premises.

Plans for future completion include a master plan for gradually improving the appearance and usability of the Forest Theater property. The structures, the equipment, and the land areas will be considered in this project.

All of this gives a small insight into the behind-the-scenes activity which is always being carried forward -- the unseen mechanics -- which make the Center operate smoothly.

"BARBARA ALLEN" meets a tragic death and "John Human" changes back to the "Witch Boy" in this scene from "Dark of the Moon" completing its run of scheduled performances at 8:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday at the Tin Barn Theatre near the top of Pvt. Bolio Road at the Presidio of Monterey.

Varied cast featured in 'Our Town'

A combination of seasoned performers and new actors spice up the cast of "Our Town" to open tomorrow at the Pacific Grove Art Center under the aegis of the Community Theatre of the Monterey Peninsula.

Director Robert Heater has selected Harry Graham to play the role of the stage manager which was one of the innovations author Thornton Wilder introduced in "Our Town," setting this play apart from other theatre of the era. Graham has appeared in many Community Theatre productions including "Ten Little Indians" and "Life With Father."

The theme of the play is the romance of Emily and George, portrayed by Audrey Swanson and Cris Thomas. Both of these young people have appeared frequently on Peninsula stages.

Miss Swanson will be remembered for her role of Lucy in "You're a Good Man Charlie Brown," at the Pacific Grove High School. Thomas' credits include "USA" for the Community Theatre and the MPC production of "Rosencranz and Gildenstern Are Dead."

Portraying Thomas' mother on stage will be Mary Thomas, who is his real life mother. She was last seen by Community Theatre audiences in "Hedda Gabler."

Marie Cortez, a newcomer to the theatre from Salinas, brings a wealth of experience in singing, acting and directing from the places her husband has been stationed with the Army. Carmel Mission Fiesta is Sept. 30

The 10th annual Fiesta de San Carlos de Borromeo will take place on Sunday, Sept. 30 at Carmel Mission from noon to 6 p.m.

Rosa Montoya, Spanish dancer from Madrid, Spain will perform at the fiesta. Of a performance in Sunset Center she once gave, Wanda Sue Tarrott wrote in the San Francisco Chronicle:

"Rosa's voice and dancing, fully exhibited the mournful wails, as well as the light-hearted gaity of Spain. Moving like a streak, she stamped offbeat rhythms which softened to unbelievable quiet. Rosa brought enthusiastic shouts of 'Ole.'"

She has danced in France, Germany and Spain.

The fiesta will include;

--An arts and crafts display with 30 artists selling their wares. There will be a glass blower included.

--An art auction of donated paintings.

--A barbecued chicken dinner.

--Manual Compos' mariachi band.

--Tacos, beer and pastries from many foreign countries.

--Mothers Club booths for younger children.

--A cake walk, grab bag and "glue-it" table for toddlers along with other games.

--A display of potted plants.

Proceeds go to the ongoing restoration of Carmel Mission.

Plant sale

The September meeting of the Court Carmel Mission No. 1496, Catholic Daughters of America saw plans completed for the court's plant sale at the Mission Field's Fiesta on Sept. 30.

Mrs. G. Douglas Wahl is chairman of the plant booth and Ann Collier is in charge of the Teen Dance to be held in Crespi Hall during the fiesta.

Regular business meetings of Court Carmel Mission are held on the second Wednesday of each month at 7:30 p.m. in Crespi Hall.

The group opened the Fall-Winter season with a "Get Acquainted Tea" on Sept. 9 for the ladies of the Carmel Mission Parish. Mrs. Frank Sieve opened her home for this event with Mrs. Clyde Allen and Esther Ely pouring. The guest of honor was Rev. Joseph Conran.

SPANISH DANCER Rosa Montoya will perform at La Fiesta de San Carlos de Borromeo at Carmel Mission Sunday. She is the daughter of flamenco guitarist Ramon Montoya. Her uncle is Carlos Montoya, also a flamenco guitarist. At the age of 12 she was awarded the Gold Medal of the Circulo de Bellas Artes. At 17 she had her own "cuadro flamenco", at the Cuevas de Nemesio in Madrid.

THE MUSIC CORNER

By IRVING W. GREENBERG

THE RELEASE by Philips (No. 6500.374) of the two piano concerti of Franz Liszt, with Alfred Brendel, pianist, and the London Symphony Orchestra conducted by guest conductor Bernard Haitink (he is the conductor of the famous Concertgebouw Orchestra of Amsterdam) gives us these works played with elegance, and with a great deal of fervor and vitality.

Inasmuch as the first concerto in E flat is much the more dynamic, so much better does Brendel fare in this one than in the second one in A major. Especially gracious and meditative does the second slow movement come through.

The orchestra accompanies him in a whirl of tonal coloration with extremely good sound response. The second concerto in A major, although it is more romantic in nature, still does not have the bite and the intensity of the first one, and here Brendel suffers slight lapses of phrasing and intonation.

An added bonus is the performance of the "Totentanz" by the same composer, which has not appeared in a new recording for a long time, and which comes through exceedingly well on this disc. It is very well that a generation that has not heard this work for piano and orchestra should be exposed to it through the medium of the phonograph. This work is a paraphrase, with variations, on the theme of the "Dies irae," and can even be considered as a piano concerto, based on a theme and variations.

Brendel is indeed very fine in his brilliant conception and exposition of this work with all the fire and intensity inherent in the score. His impeccable virtuosity is keenly manifest in his performance of this work. The orchestra accompanies him with the same wonderful tonal palette that is so characteristic of the London Symphony Orchestra, particularly when it is directed by such a magnificent craftsman as Haitink.

A previous recording of Philips' (No. 835474) of the two Liszt piano concerti with Sviatoslav Richter, the famous Russian pianist, and the London Symphony Orchestra conducted by the Russian Kyril Kondrashin, exposes these works with greater effectiveness, since Richter is undoubtedly one of the world's greatest pianists, but the London Symphony Orchestra under Kondrashin does not sound as definitive as under Haitink.

THE RECORDING of Richard Strauss' Suite in B flat, Op. 4 (1883) and his Sonatina in F major (1943) for wind instruments by Philips (No. 6500.297) couples two works in this category of unusual instrumentation. The first one is a work of Strauss' at the age of 20 and the second one he composed at the age of 80. The Netherlands Wind Ensemble, a group of young instrumentalists from the leading orchestras of the Netherlands, has devoted itself to bringing to the attention of the public the neglected wind music of both the classical and the modern masters.

The early Suite in B flat for Thirteen Wind Instruments, Op. 4, is redolent with youthful ebulliency and inventiveness. Particularly engaging is the second Romance movement, where there is a lovely lyric flow. This reviewer, having heard the Netherlands Wind Ensemble in concert in this area, expected they would perform this work with their usual bravura and with intensive harmonic and rhythmic delivery. This is exactly what it sounds like on this recording.

The Sonatina No. 1 in F major is a much more sombre and more scholarly work, dating from the last years of Strauss' life. Although it is somewhat derivative of some of his other scores, it still exhibits a certain amount of originality, particularly in the first and second movements. The beginning of the third movement, however, wanders away repetitiously, and it is not until the final half of this movement that we again experience a sense of exhiliration and vibrancy and an interesting tonality.

The Netherlands Wind Ensemble, with a number of its members acting as soloists in this work, plays with its usual brio and dedication to this type of wind ensemble scoring.

As usual, the Philips imported discs are excellent in sound projection, as well as having smooth surfaces with no mechanical distortions of any kind.

PHILIPS AGAIN has released a new recording of W. A. Mozart's Mass in C minor, K. 427 (No. 6500.235) in the fragmentary form in which Mozart left this work.

The principals involved here are Helen Donath and Heather Harper, sopranos; Ryland Davies, tenor; Stafford Dean, bass; the London Symphony Orchestra and Chorus, all conducted by Colin Davis. Mozart composed the Kyrie and the Gloria and the Credo as far as the "Et incarnatus est," and the Sanctus and the Benedictus. The missing sections are the second part of the Credo from the "Crucifixus" onward and the entire Agnus Dei.

In a previous monaural recording on Epic records, the missing part of the Credo was reconstructed by Dr. Nernhard Paumgartner, the eminent Mozart scholar, from the Mozart Missa Longo in C major, K. 262, and the Agnus Dei was a repeat of the music for the Kyrie and the Christe. In addition, in the "Et incarnatus est," Mozart wrote out only the vocal soprano part. The three woodwind parts and figured bass had to be reconstructed from the orchestral parts. The Mass presented on this recording is a brilliant, deeply motivated and highly devoted conception.

Heather Harper, that magnificent soprano, excels in her rendition of her solo arias in the Kyrie and the "Laudamus te" in the Gloria; in her duets with Helen Donath, another glorious soprano, in the "Domine Deus" and in the trio in the Gloria with the other soprano and the tenor; and in the quartet from the "Benedictus" with the other soprano, the tenor and the bass.

Needless to say, Helen Donath has proven herself to be one of the most exceptional young emerging sopranos with her clear and vibrant vocal range, her beautiful intonation and articulation, as well as her exquisite fioritura. Magnificent as her duets, her trio, and quartet with the other singers are, she reaches an apogee of musical and vocal perfection in her aria "Et incarnatus est" in the Credo.

Her voice is youthfully fresh and brilliant and her projection of this one aria is a marvel to hear from the beginning to the end. This reviewer is reminded of the performance of this aria by Erna Berger, which has been considered the ultimate in expressive vocalism; and which Miss Donath approaches, albeit with a lighter voice and in a more reflective and nostalgic manner. The tenor, Ryland Davies, and the bass, Stafford Dean, are also excellent in their short parts.

The Chorus is excellent throughout, singing with great eclat and with an incandescent fervor in all the five parts of the Mass recorded here. To give the kind of performance of the work that appears on this disc, their choral training must have been adept in the expression of the polyphonic nature of this work.

The disc here reviewed was warped, but after correction of this defect, manifested all the classic tone level of Philips' imported and impressive records.

Unless one insists on a "complete" edition, this recording should stand out as a memorial for the performance of the Mass, and Colin Davis has proven previously that in his Mozart readings he is keenly aware of the subtleties of this composer, and is deeply attuned to the idiom of Mozart.

The symbolism of the Great Seal of the U.S. – 'things that go beyond ordinary thought'

"There are things to be found here that go beyond ordinary thought," said Dr. Lawrence McCafferty, as he sought to explain "the destiny of the United States as foretold in the symbols of the Great Seal."

McCafferty spoke for two hours to about 150 people at Monterey Peninsula College on Saturday night.

The Great Seal, which was originally commissioned by the Continental Congress after the signing of the Declaration of Independence, can be found on many governmental documents and on the back of the familiar American $1 bill.

The front side of the seal contains an engraving of what appears to be the American bald eagle clutching an olive branch and arrows, symbolic of peace and war. The reverse shows an eye suspended on an illuminated background, at the unfinished summit of an Egyptian pyramid.

McCafferty, formerly a philosophy instructor at U.S. International University in San Diego, has done much research on comparative religions and esoteric literature.

He lectures each Friday night at Sunset Center in Carmel on "Guided Meditation."

To establish the credibility of his views on the Great Seal, concerning its origins and meaning, he proceeded slowly and with great care to outline the research he had done at the Library of Congress and elsewhere.

"I hope to share with you what I have come to see and possibly enrich your understanding. I will not take away any convictions you might have, but we all must agree on the facts," he said.

The first designs for a Greal Seal were proposed by Benjamin Franklin, John Adams, and Thomas Jefferson. They wanted to create an allegorical poem that would express the destiny of the new country, said McCafferty.

It was not until 1782 that a design was finally adopted. The phoenix, a mythological bird, was used on the seal.

According to legend, the bird was supposed to live for several hundred years before it was immolated in a nest of fire, and then it would rise from the ashes on the third day to begin its life cycle anew.

But ever since this bird was chosen for the seal it has been mistaken for the bald eagle. An unfortunate symbol, said Franklin, who considered the eagle a prideful, lazy, and quarrelsome creature -- a bird wholly lacking in virtue. Franklin wrote that the eagle "did not get his living honestly," said McCafferty.

The Founding Fathers were reacting against the political and intellectual tyranny that existed in countries throughout Europe, McCafferty said.

"We are so far removed from those ages of repression that we find it difficult to believe in the necessity of secret societies," he said.

Societies were founded in Europe and were eventually established in the colonies. Many Founding Fathers were members.

Franklin was a member of the masonic order and several theosophical organizations.

These groups were not interested in good works. They had an esoteric foundation, said McCafferty. They saw themselves as preservers of ancient spiritual traditions, gained principally from Eyptian lore.

The symbols on the Great Seal are based on symbolism that can be traced to the secret societies of the Founding Fathers.

They believed that spiritual consciousness could lead to contact with the Divine, and that everyone had this capacity.

"There are no secrets to the mind that is awake," McCafferty said.

McCafferty contended that the Egyptian pyramid was a creation of people who had an exceptional knowledge of mathematics as well as a highly developed spiritual consciousness.

The pyramid on the seal represents absolute proportion, McCafferty said, and there is a correspondence between its perfect outer form and the inner consciousness of the individual, which is represented by an eye at the top of the pyramid -- an eye that sees outward as well as in.

The phoenix on the front of the seal signifies the possibility of rebirth and awakening to knowledge, said McCafferty. It means that man has the power to liberate himself from his five senses and attain a higher level of consciousness.

McCafferty said he wanted the audience to apply the original implications of the symbols on the Great Sael, instead of ignoring the symbols.

He called for "the liberation of the heart and mind," which, he said, corresponds to the phoenix rising from the ashes and the light emanating from the pyramid's single eye.

This was the intention of Franklin and the other early designers of the Seal, McCafferty said.

"We should restore the original meaning of greatness that the phoenix symbolizes -- greatness of soul, greatness of mind, and greatness of spirit," he said.

"Soil Extracted, not scrubbed deeper—that's the difference!"

Reflections on the Carmel art scene, Part I

The Carmel Pine Cone

SECTION II

(EDITOR'S NOTE: The following is the first in a series of articles attempting to shed some light on the Carmel art scene today, and how it compares with that of 20 or more years ago. The articles take the form of interviews with Carmel artists, as they reflect on the nature and development of a local art esthetic.)

By BRADWELL SCOTT

ONLY 20 years ago, Carmel was so endowed with graphic art talent that the likes of Salvadore Dali moved here to work.

But today, even the unsophisticated observer of art can recognize that many Carmel art galleries display a certain sameness: seascapes, landscapes, and sunsets.

The question arises: what is the nature of the "Carmel art scene" today, and how does it differ from that of 20 to 40 years ago?

Carmel's early development, as history tells us, was intimately tied up with its creative endeavor in art, as the founders Devendorf and Powers gave away free land to artists to encourage their settlement here.

Among those early settlers (though some were not recipients of free land) were such widely known artists as: Armin Hansen, Charles Rollo Peters, Paul Dougherty, Francis McComas, Paul Whitman, William Ritchel, John O'Shea and Arthur Hill Gilbert. Theirs were the names which firmly established Carmel as an art colony of high repute.

Galleries all over the nation, it is said, responded with consistent enthusiasm to the name "Carmel artist." But the well-known Los Angeles dealer Feingarten now refuses to allow one local artist to identify himself as a Carmel resident as long as he exhibits in his galleries.

Gerald Wasserman, Carmel artist, and member of the Carmel Art Association for many years, offers a valuable perspective on the Carmel art scene after returning from two years activities in Rome. He is widely recognized among his colleagues as a talented, technically competent painter and sculptor in the "modern" idiom. He is also a graduate of the Chicago Art Institue and a long-time exhibitor at galleries throughout the Peninsula.

Reflecting on the general character of art in Carmel, he says: "Carmel is not one art scene, but many scenes -- it is the art market which predominates; is much more active -- the really serious art work, reminiscent of the past, has substantially diminished."

Wasserman was quick to point out, however, that "many Carmel artists now living in Carmel, do the kind of commercially-aloof work that the old guys did."

Of recent award-winning artist Sam Colburn, Wasserman said, "Sam, for example, is one of the most accomplished painters ever to work in this area -- highly respected by his fellow artists. His work, mainly watercolors, reflects that unique character of the area but at the same time reflects the modern idiom -- non-imitative -- in a way that much of the art that really sells in Carmel does not."

HE REFERRED to an article published by another Carmel artist, John Boit Morse, in San Francisco Magazine, wherein a statement is given about artistic commercialism in Carmel:

"...the majority of palettes have become tourist-directed and they produce a product unloved by urban collectors, galleries, critics and museums. The market is large and lucrative..."

"Still," Wasserman stipulated, there is plenty of good work going on in Carmel -- maybe a bit harder to find because it's overshadowed by more popular tastes. People like Paco Ferro are still here, though."

Undismayed by what he acknowledged to be a predominance of profit-oriented galleries peddling virtual "shlock" to the public, Wasserman asserted "there are always too few people who have highly-cultivated or advanced tastes in art," and that these galleries aren't doing anything really destructive.

"I think of them in the same way I think of Hollywood and its history of primary complicity to the customer -- always providing what is popularly demanded. Anyway, people who want the "modern" are often no different than those who can only look at the old mirror-of-nature jobs. On the one hand, there are those who questionably identify themselves with "modern," and so they look at an abstract -- any abstract -- and say, 'Oh! I want that!' without really feeling anything for the piece; on the other hand, there are those who stick with straight representationalism -- thinking they like Rembrandt, when they really only like old men with beards."

John Cunningham, a fellow member of the Carmel Art Association, said "more originality shows itself here than in the big city art centers which are usually dominated...by the new breed of scholars who like to think themselves as 'inventing the new directions'..." and that "the work has a greater visual vitality (in Carmel) than that of the big cities."

Wasserman responded: "That's a funny way to talk about our little town -- there's a lot of big cities out there."

"I like John," Wasserman continued, "and I agree that there are a lot of curators and museum presidents and scholars who fancy themselves as 'creating new directions,' but I find that contact with contemporary thinking and movements is refreshing."

Wasserman says a quite different group constituting perhaps the most vital and aesthetically impressive artists in the Carmel area are those whose work is modern and contemporary.

He named Joan Savo, Virginia Hannon, Allan Parker, Andrea Spark, Eugene Newman, Dick Crispo, Alex Gonzales, Merilyn Brown and Virginia Conroy.

He says these artists are known to one another, admire each other's works, and "share a common esthetic that distinguishes their work from that of their more conservative colleagues."

WASSERMAN SAID much of the difference between the two -- the mostly sales-oriented old-style majority, and the more independent, contemporary minority -- comes down to the issue of representation in the arts.

"The more traditional view is that it is the function of the work of art to hold up a mirror to nature, to those portions of nature which appear to be most pleasing. The painting will therefore represent nature as seen by the artist.

"It will not be exactly photographic, but it will reflect what the artist sees in nature or what he wishes the viewer to see. The function of his art is at once to reflect nature and to satisfy popular demands."

"The other direction, I think, is to make a work whose result becomes a new form. And when a new form comes out, people don't know what to do with it -- or other people, even when they know they love it, I mean really directly respond to it, they don't know that the forms are new -- they never thought of forms.

"For this sort of artist, the painting, the two-dimensional surface, is not a mirror of nature or a window opening up on nature, but an object in itself, which, by virtue of the forms that the artist creates, has the ability to move us and modify the way we see.

"You know the story about Matisse," he said, "when the man said, 'Mssr. Matisse, the arm of that woman is too long,' Matisse answered, 'That's a woman, that's a painting.' The work of art has its own life -- it's not obliged to represent, depict or mirror it."

Wasserman said there is perhaps a more vigorous artistic scene in the areas surrounding Carmel because of their wider contemporary orientation, and because "Monterey museums, for example, don't have to sell their paintings so they don't have to answer to the market -- consequently, there's a more independent, higher standard of creative endeavor."

Of his own art, mainly painting and recently some bronze sculputre, Wasserman said, "I hope I'm a modern artist."

And in response to the question as to whether he thought modern art is inherently more profound than traditional art, Wasserman stated: "I don't believe in progress in art -- artists make progress: in every period there are those artists who have realized their God-given potential, but one period does not improve on the next.

"Art has to be of its own time," Wasserman stressed, "otherwise, you're denying a fact, that's all -- you're just denying a fact."

Baez says the future rests with technology

Dr. Albert Baez, physicist and humanitarian, told members of the United Nations Association of the Monterey Peninsula last weekend science and technology hold the key to social change.

Through education, he said Sunday in a meeting at the Northern California Bank in Carmel, people are becoming aware of the need for population controls.

"The long-range goal of the United Nations is to apply science and technology to service mankind. And it is in the 13 specialized agencies of the United Nations where the actual implementation of the ideals (of the U. N.) takes place," Baez said.

Included in the specialized agencies which Baez mentioned are the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO), the World Health Organization (WHO), and the atomic energy (ILO) and children's fund (UNICEF) organizations.

Baez pointed out how science and technology created adverse effects on mankind, such as his "Four P's; population, pollution, poverty and the pursuit of peace.

Baez said science and technology increased man's longevity and decreased the death rate (as well as at birth), and discussed the population doubling every 35 years, and said "the increment of people (in Asia) will soon exceed the population of the world in 1961."

One member posed a question to him stating that the people doing something about over-population, the educated ones, do not have as much to worry about as those less educated, living in densely populated countries.

DR. ALBERT BAEZ

Baez said it's just not possible to tell a country what to do -- only to advise and educate. The decision to take action must lie with the citizens of that country, he said.

He then discussed pollution, stressing that the United States, which comprises only 60 per cent of the world's population, "gobbles up" 40 per cent of the world's natural resources.

"All power pollutes," he said. "The rich can pollute, and turn on their air-conditioners to protect themselves against the pollution outside that the poor must put up with."

"Soon there will be great social tension by the poor of the world who have to inhale the pollution produced by the rich," he warned.

He relayed other troubling statistics: only the United States and Sweden have an annual per capita income of more than $4,000. But 56 other countries have up to $200 (or under). Baez then referred to a speech given by Robert MacNamara, former Secretary of Defense, in which he said: "There is less food per person today, on the average, than there was 30 years ago during the Depression."

"The pursuit of peace is aggravated by the fact that scientists spend a lot of time, energy and money on the production of mass destruction instruments," he said. "The majority of scientists, if funded through an agency or means other than their own, work as engineers," he stated.

"It has been the traditional concept for scientists to "do their duty" when, for example, they produce poisonous gas during a war," he added.

The question Baez posed is whether man can solve the "Four P's" without future science and technology. His answer was "no."

"Along with education, feelings of concern and responsibility have to be instilled in each student and must be continuously emphasized," Baez said.

His guidelines for total education in the future (specifically in the teaching of science) are part of the constructive activities of the U. N.

These guidelines constitute curiosity, creativity, competence and compassion, (the "Four C's").

"Curiosity must be more than mere understanding, it must be a natural driving force which is all too often submerged through lack of patience," he said.

"We must find the curious and the creative, and help them to develop their potential," he added.

Portrait party held for Elizabeth Palmer

Mrs. Selma Maschke, formerly of Cleveland, Ohio, held a champagne party to unveil a portrait of herself painted by the guest-of-honor, Elizabeth Palmer, last Wednesday afternoon in Carmel.

Miss Palmer, originally from Boston, Mass., majored in fine arts and costume design at the University of Cincinnati, and is a member of Theta Alpha Phi, National Honorary Fraternity of the Theatre.

She attended Columbia University, where she was selected as one of the 10 most creative students by the dean of women and the New York Herald. Miss Palmer also attended Yale University, where she received her Master of Fine Arts, as well as the San Francisco Art Institute and Columbia University.

Mrs. Maschke also had several of Miss Palmer's paintings on display at her home. Included was a portrait of Dr. Dan Gornel, which, Mrs. Al Railton commented, "... looked so much like him, I thought he'd start speaking."

"I love to paint anywhere in or near the ocean," Miss Palmer said, of which her "Lavender Cafe" is an example, painted on the beach at Moss Landing. Another painting of an ocean view was done on the rocks at Point Lobos.

Also on display was a picture of Moroccans Miss Palmer painted when she left Boston in 1965 to travel and paint in Europe and lived in Morocco for two years.

"I have many more paintings I did while in Morocco, but I'm saving them until I can display them in a 'Morocco showing' at a gallery or art show," Miss Palmer said.

While in Morocco, Miss Palmer taught private classes in painting, held a one-hour daily program in English for Radio Morocco (which was heard in North Africa and Spain) and also directed and staged a play with students from Mohammed V University; then taped the play at the request of Voice of America. She also narrated two short Moraccan documentary films for King Hassan, which he presented to the late President Johnson, and returned to San Francisco late in 1967.

Miss Palmer, who makes her home in Carmel now, hopes to teach figure painting and its environment, in all media, as well as drawings at the Pacific Grove Art Center, while continuing her painting. She has exhibited paintings in New Haven, Boston, Cincinnati, Fresno, San Francisco, Rabat, Morocco and now in Pebble Beach and Carmel at Beeches' Gallery on San Carlos between Ocean and 7th.

Mrs. Maschke commissioned Miss Palmer to do her portrait after seeing the portrait of Dr. Gornel. A patron of the arts, a former model, a concert pianist and wife of physician, Ali Maschke, Mrs. Maschke came to Carmel four years ago.

Now, at the age of 81, Mrs. Maschke is still as active as ever, involving herself with the Symphony Guild as well as helping Miss Palmer, and others like her, reach their goals, and getting acquainted with the people of the Carmel area.

The bright and lively artist hopes to build her reputation in this area based on her philosophy in painting:

"I believe in the creative relationship between painting and music, whether I am working on a portrait or a scene from nature. The rhythms of light through shapes and color should reveal an emotional sensation; an illusion of spontaneity and feelings of that moment," she said.

"I am intrigued with the indescribable mystery of the essence of life; the spiritual and physical drama and the involvement with human feelings. In my portraits, I try for the interior life of people in an intuitive, not an analytical way, or as a photographic image," Miss Palmer continued.

"A painting is my visual communication through a personal concept, which I approach with joy, excitement, involvement, tenderness and love, to create the experience of the moment."

Attending the party were Mrs. Ken Gardner, Mrs. Edgar Gallwey, Mrs. Eugene von Taeuber, Mrs. Cecil Barker, Mrs. Harry Davega, Mrs. Frederich Stanley, Mrs. Albert Frye, Mrs. Albert Railton, Mrs. Mary FitzGerald Beach, Mrs. Sidney Lee, Mrs. Webb Downer, Mrs. Libby Earl Dunton, Mrs. William Cole, Mrs. Amy Geraghty and Mrs. Frank Cartwright.

Berliners visit Carmel

Mrs. Fridrich Voigt, mother of Mrs. Derek Rayne, and Miss Sigrid Krassler, cousin of Mrs. Rayne, both from West Berlin, are vacationing in Carmel with the Raynes.

While in California, they plan to visit Mrs. Daniel Crain, Mrs. Rayne's sister, in Santa Clara, and with friends in Tahoe, Santa Barbara and Los Angeles.

When asked what they thought of Carmel, Miss Krassler said, "I think it's very lovely. There are a lot of flowers, trees and beautiful landscaping here -- not like the high-rises we have in Berlin."

Her first trip to the United States, Miss Krassler's only complaint was the burial grounds for wrecked automobiles, she saw coming from Oakland to Carmel.

Mrs. Voigt was very impressed by the courtesy of the people on the streets of Carmel. Because she has difficulty walking, she thought for sure she'd be pushed around, and was very surprised that she wasn't.

She also liked the fact there are places to eat breakfast early in the morning, something unheard of in Berlin. The only thing Mrs. Voigt didn't like was all the commercials on television but who does?

Mexican fare for the Carmel Mission Fiesta

By PHYLLIS JERVEY

THIS COMING Sunday (Sept. 30) the traditional fiesta of Carmel Mission's patron saint, San Carlos de Borromeo, will be celebrated after mass with an always-successful barbecue in the Mission's picturesque courtyard.

Harry Downie, noted authority on the era when Californian missions were founded and enthused curator-restorer of this special mission, gave us some first-hand highlights.

In the beginning, wheat grew in the fields near the mission with grapes for wine in the Valley. And so, what with wild game and birds, plus deer and fish, early Californians fared well. Chick peas (garbanzos), corn, mainstay of the converted Indians were plentiful, although these originals had well subsisted on acorns and game before the Spaniards took over.

What fascinating stories Harry recounts! The Mission Trail, now Camino Real, skirts our coast for 650 miles. The padres planted seeds, vines and trees. They brought herbs and piquant spices from old Mexico, planting these in mission gardens, leaving a heritage of flavor to enliven diets.

Carmelo Barbecued Chicken

Halved fresh broilers will be cooked to a tender turn by Nick Limvov, well known Peninsula chef for more than 25 years, now with the Briar House Carmel, Actually Fort Ord does the work, but this is Nick's recipe:

Barbecue Sauce: Only purest olive oil mixed with dry mustard, salt, pepper, paprika, crushed oregano, red wine and chopped tomatoes, green bell peppers and red onions. Do not marinate chickens but baste with this picante sauce at least 24 hours ahead to meld flavors. Shake in washed milk cartons each time before using.

Pinco Frijoles: Use the small pink beans, soaking overnight. Next day, drain and add fresh water to cover. Bring to a slight boil then simmer until just tender, not 'bursted'. This takes about two hours according to Nick for this is also his own version.

One hour before beans are ready for consuming by the eager crowd, add to one lb. package beans, about one-quarter cup wine vinegar, salt, pepper, paprika to taste. Add one small can of tomato paste -- too much will leave an acid taste. A quick dash of sugar will give a lift. At serving, top with fresh minced parsley. It is best to add salt towards end.

There is always a taco booth at this fiesta with small burros toting vino. How we all love real tacos to help ward off the impatience of waiting in line for the aromatic barbacoa (contraction of barba -- beard ... so prevalent today -- with cola -- tail ... meaning when a whole beef is charcoaled from head to tail over glowing pit . Chickens now replace this.

Carmel Tacos

For a small patio group at home or on the beach, use one and one-half lbs. ground beef; one onion, chopped finely; 1 mashed garlic clove; three cans green chilies, minced; two fresh tomatoes, chopped; pinch of thyme, oregano, laurel (bay leaf), salt and pepper, chili powder, pure olive oil.

Combine everything, saute in oil, stirring until meat is broken. Cover and cook over lowest heat, watching the pot. Use 12 prepared tortillas for 12 tacos. Dip tortillas in hot oil, turn over, remove and drain. Place two tbsps. in each, fold, fasten with picks. Serve warm to hot. Que bueno!

Our sage man, Harry Downie, tells us that Spanish soldiers who guarded the missions preferred white flour tortillas instead of cornmeal or masa, upon which Indians and Mexicanos doted.

Harry Downie's Own Tortillas
(Makes 16)

Two cups unsifted white wheat flour, one tbsp. shortening; slight pinch of salt; enough water to make stiff dough.

Divide this into 16 round balls, pressing very thinly. Use floured rolling pin until these make 10-inch diameters. Fry speedily in cast iron skillet with shortening until golden brown on each side. Wrap in cloth to keep warm.

Salsa (Sauce): Two lbs. dried chili peppers, cleaned, stems removed. Grind in metate (stone mortar and pestle) or modern grinder; add water just to cover, boiling gently with two crushed garlic cloves with one-half tsp. each, oregano, comino, mint (yerba buena), sugar and salt to taste. Simmer with flour to slight thickness. Pour hot over and inside tortillas.

Be sure to visit the Early Mission Kitchen at Carmel Mission. With its ancient cooking utensils you'll not be ashamed of your old jobs at home.

The padres left a trail of mustard seeds to indicate followers where they were trying to go. Therefore those brilliant yellow blooms between today's artichoke plants.

This Week's Bonus: Margarita Cocktailito (Individual Serving) one and one-half oz. tequila and lemon juice, each; dash of cointreau and salt. Strain into chilled cocktail glass lightly rimmed with wet salt. "Salut y pesetas y tiempo para gustarlos." (Health and wealth and time in which to enjoy them!)

But Volvo isn't just roomy. It's comfortable.

The bucket seats are orthopedically designed to give support to all the contours of the body. Even to the point of having an adjustment that gives the small of your back firmer or softer support.

And in a Volvo, you won't have to gather your courage to enter crowded highways. Its responsive, fuel-injected engine lets you move out into traffic before onrushing traffic moves into you.

And once you're out there, you'll actually feel the rigidity of Volvo's body—welded into one solid piece of steel with thousands of closely-spaced spot welds.

So instead of overreacting to the gasoline shortage, respond thoughtfully. By getting a Volvo.

That way, you can drive a big car without adding fuel to the energy crisis.

It was a real gem of a jewelry exhibit

Leysen Freres, the largest jewelry manufacturer of Brussels, Belgium, has been in existance since 1855.

Science and modern industrial processes have had slight influence on this gem-cutting industry. The family is still the basic business unit, and traditions of the guild have not been sacrificed with the passing of time.

This was evident in the jewelery exhibited by Jacques and Henri Leysen of Brussels and presented by Henri Corbat of Carmel, at the Library Room in Del Monte Lodge last Thursday evening.

Glittering rubies, emeralds, sapphires and diamonds were admired by some 400 guests of Corbat. Especially awesome was the 10.13 carat "Marquis" diamond ring, valued at $210,000 and the 23.76 carat emerald ring worth $240,000.

Another sensational piece of jewelry was an emerald necklace, the emerald being 9.02 carats, surrounded by 42 carats worth of diamonds valued at $305,000.

As early as Fifth Century B.C., a Greek seer and priest, Onomacritus, employing ancient Babylonian ideas, discussed the power believed to be held by gem stones. Besides being used in jewelry, gems' hardness, clearness, brilliance and eternal newness caused them to be regarded as miraculous, and endowed with mysterious powers.

It was believed the diamond gave its wearer strength in battle against the enemy and protected him against ghosts and magic. The sapphire is traditionally a symbol of heavenly bliss and a pledge of faithfulness, also a protection against poverty and betrayal, as well as supposedly preventing eye diseases and curing snake bites.

The ruby ensured love and happiness and eliminated bad dreams. It also gave peace and serenity. The emerald brought its wearer riches and fame, broke at the instance of marital infidelity, and when the wearer put it under his tongue, endowed him with the gift of prophecy.

Included in the jewelry exhibit were pieces made from turquoise, which was believed to have prevented accidents, especially falls from a horse. Some unusual jewelry, made of tourmaline, coral and seashells, were also exhibited. There were agate and rodhenoite pieces, as well as lapis lazuli and malachite jewelry.

Notable was a gold butterfly pin, the body of the insect encrusted with diamonds, its wings made of black opal.

"Black opal is a rare and most beautiful stone," Henri Leysen, son of Jacques Leysen, said.

An aquamarine ring, abalone brooches and an opal pendant also graced the showcases. There were 84 pieces of jewelery worth more than $4 million. Three showcases held gems secured with gold, and two cases held gems secured with platinum.

"I can't speak for all of Europe, but we in Belgium use more platinum and precious stones. The United States uses more semi-precious stones and silver or white gold in their jewelry," Henri Leysen added.

Seemingly made for royalty, but available for those desiring exquisite jewelry, the gems will be on display at Corbat's shop on San Carlos at 5th in Carmel, from Sept. 21-27, open every day from 9:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.

CARMEL MAYOR Bernard Anderson (far right) accepted a memento from the councillors and president of Warringah Shire, with a letter of greetings, from A.A. Langford (left).

Austrailians visit Carmel; learn of common interests

An unofficial delegation of Australians paid a visit to Carmel this week, sightseeing, vacationing, and learning about problems and potentials of the area from city officials.

Their visit, which started last Wednesday and which ended Tuesday, was arranged through the auspices of the Barrenjoey and Shire News, a newspaper in Warringah Shire, a suburb of Sydney.

The group of 10 was especially interested in the Carmel area, since it shares with their area common environmental and developmental problems. The trip had its genesis following the visit several months ago of Bob Ryan, editor of the weekly newspaper, to Carmel.

The Australians spent two days in San Francisco, before coming to Carmel. All said they were duly impressed with those San Francisco phenomena which are standard tourist fare -- cable cars, nightclubs, Fisherman's Wharf.

Bayless discussed transportation problems on the Monterey Peninsula with the group, describing the current effort by the Joint Powers Agency to assume operation of bus routes formerly operated by the Bay Rapid Transit Co., which is to go out of business this week.

Griggs discussed planning within Carmel's city limits with the group, describing the composition of the planning commission and the design review board, which exert policy control in planning matters.

He also gave them a brief history of the town of Carmel, describing continuing efforts to resist the encroachment of commercialism. The Australians said one of their main concerns at present is the need for a locally operated sewage disposal system.

They were also especially interested in scouting activities in Carmel, and A. A. Langford of Avalon Beach, New South Wales, Australia, quizzed Greg D'Ambrosio, who also is involved with scout activities here, about the mechanics of American scouting.

Langford said his community is searching for a building in which to house scouting activities, and was told about the fact a weight-lifting, boxing, recreational program is offered at Carmel's Sunset Cultural Center through the Carmel Police Department in cooperation with the city.

Also on hand at Tuesday's session at City Hall was Frank H. Riley, director of cultural activities for Carmel, who gave the group a synopsis of activities at Sunset Center.

Afterwards, the group was taken on a guided tour of the city by city officials, culminating in a luncheon at the Highlands Inn, where the group stayed during their Carmel visit.

There, they were joined by former State Sen. Fred Farr of Carmel, and several city officials from Carmel.

The group represented a cross-section of residents of the area outside Sydney, but they were not governmental officials.

The group, consisting of nine women and one man, expressed an interest in practically everything American: sports, newspapers, local government, education, and developmental problems.

Several members of the group said there is an organized conservation movement in Australia, a nation generally regarded as having a "boom economy." But there are formidable obstacles to the conservation movement, too.

They related that all undeveloped land in Australia belongs to the crown, and, in one instance where citizens wanted to prevent a certain development in a vulnerable area of natural beauty, the land was purchased by private citizens from the government and then given back for open space.

The group observed that meat prices in Australia are rising alarmingly fast, largely because Americans are buying Australian beef in great volume.

There was more than a passing connection between America's Monterey Peninsula and Australia, too, in that most of the Monterey Pine trees purchased by the city of Carmel are germinated first in Australia, then shipped to this country, explained D'Ambrosio.

The purpose of their trip was to observe and, hopefully, learn things which might be of value in their community after they return.

The members of the group were: A. A. Langford, Avalon Beach; Beverley Hilleand, Avalon Beach; Beatrice McDonald, Avalon Beach; Anne Elelman, Mona Vale; Kim Baillie, Killarney Heights; Doreen Cherry, Avalon Beach; Elena Isles; Beryl Dearlove, Padstow; Betty Pearsall, Whale Beach; Olive Braton, Mona Vale.

The delegation of Australians gave five books on their homeland to Mayor Bernard Anderson, who in turn donated them to the children's library of Harrison Memorial Library.

They also brought a bottle of a new variety of Australian wine from Sydney, and kangaroo pins, as well as posters depicting familiar scenes in New South Wales.

The varieties of diversion on the Spanish coast

By DONALD W. REYNOLDS

"Since the day I was born, I have been walking toward death. My pace is still steady; but personal charm after 60? There might still be a future for you in the wax works, or as an antique vase in a museum.

"But the old scarecrow will stick in peoples' craw...if he is loaded?... Well, maybe he will be barely tolerated...but a white-haired pauper -- take him away!

"Crabby, toothless, ignorant, hunchbacked, always hawking and spitting..."

So, a new-found West German acquaintance explained what he was doing at the six hundred million peseta, newly-constructed hotel and clinic on the Costa del Sol six miles from Marbella, Spain.

The wheel of progress has come full circle.

Almost four centuries ago, Ponce de Leon sailed from Spain to find the fountain of youth in the new world. In April of this year, during the Easter holidays, the Instituto Medico Costa del Sol - Incosol for short, opened in Marbella. It was quite an occasion - almost a family affair, for El Candillo.

Gen. Francisco Franco himself was there to inaugurate the luxurious, totally comprehensive new health and rejuvenator complex over which his son-in-law, the Marques de Villaverde, presided.

Its 400 rooms make it one of the largest health centers in the world, and certainly one of the most beautiful, decorated as it is by Casa Jardin.

There is a golf course, the Rio Real, adjoining, two indoor swimming pools and an outdoor one, six tennis courts, saunas, special chefs for special diets and medical specialists who can handle anything that ails you, with the accent on revitalization which includes cellular therapy with lyophilized fresh cells and cytoplasmatic substances and drug therapy with procain - vitamin combinations.

But despite the special planes that flew in from Paris, London and Rome for the gala opening, all has not gone well with the $12 million project. Apparently, the fantastic house party opening set standards that the day-to-day bread and butter operation couldn't maintain.

Less than two months after the clinic was inaugurated, it closed for reorganization. The hotel section fared a bit better with a trickle of visitors during the hot summer months. Elevators have been repaired or perhaps in this atmosphere, "rejuvenated" is the more appropriate word, although even now the dining room is isolated with three flights of stairs while the harrassed architect is frantically trying to design a new shaft that the government safety board will permit them to operate.

After a 30-day reorganization, the clinic has been reopened and things appear to be operating more successfully - but more on that next week after I've had an opportunity to check the new phase.

Marbella, Spain: Undoubtedly the most fascinating aspects of travel are the contacts with out of this world folks, both fellow tourists and natives. Casual conversations with people you never again expect to see --a ships that pass in the night sort of background lend enchantment to the commonest sort of talk. And where better to enjoy such experiences than among the visitors to the Costa del Sol.

"The soliciting of alms is a noble profession" insisted one of my conversationalists at the swimming pool bar at the Incosol. He was a Moor, returning to Spain and Malaga, from where his ancestors had been expelled five hundred years ago. Obviously a financial success, he was telling me, in excellent English, of his family background. His father and his father's father, for generations had been beggars along the winding lanes of the Casbah in Algiers. Certainly not paupers, not even impecunious. It took almost an hour of careful listening to finally understand that he was engaged, as a family business, in what we would call the protection racket. It was, as he explained, "a living." One that enabled him to pay $150 a day for one of the most elaborate suites in the hotel -- and at least for a short time give him a vacation from his work across the straits in North Africa.

Spanish craftsmen, famed throughout the world for the exquisite leather goods are facing new problems. Of all things, they blame the woman's lib movement in the United States.

"It took a boyishly exhuberant president to free the male sex from their unattractive unnecessary head pieces." "Today men's hat mills have gone the way of the buggy whip factories."

"And what do you you see now? The active, attractive young girl aspires to go through life uncluttered." "No need to have something to nervously wave -- no need to be reminded that handbags are a throw back to the days when all females were considered just a degree above the beast of burden that the dominent male controlled." Another vocal opponent of the new feminism.

One keeps up their share of the conversation, limited only by their imagination. It isn't considered good form to doubt the authenticity of any contributor. But when pinned down I have one stock answer. "I'm just like you -- I lie a lot, too."

Costa del Sol, Spain: "Lo peor de la plaga se fue" greets you from the taxi drivers, waiters, bar tenders, sales persons, room clerks and all of the other natives serving the tourist hordes that flood the beaches here.

Not being a very good linguist, I asked for a translation and had surprising difficulty in getting it. Finally found a bi-lingual waiter that embarassingly explained that the rather free translation was that "The worst of the locusts have gone." And for more than a week the roads have been bumper to bumper, the buses packed and the "no space available " recording on the airline phones.

I have found that few tourists are happy with the accommodations, food or general acceptance, but had taken it as the normal griping of travelers. It was just a little bit surprising to find that the hosts were even happier to see the guests leaving than were the guests to leave.

One of my favorite stories, told as only the late Joe E. Lewis could tell a story: After quite a build up Joe would introduce his long time piano player, Mr. Mack. The audience prefunctorily applauded, and then Lewis with the perfect timing that made him one of the greatest stand up comedians of his time, brought the house down as he drawled, "He doesn't like you very much either!"

Since the days of the Roman Empire, tourism, under many names, has been an integral part of European history. Be it the legions of Caesar or the retired folks on the American Express bus. Almost two thousand years hasn't truly changed the picture. The guests still make the host doubly glad -- twice happy - when they arrive, and when they go. And while the money brought in is accepted, in some instances quite graciously, the sigh of relief on the "locusts" departure is definitely audible.

So why the travel? I've talked to many almost professional vagabonds that have toured the world. Complaining about everything, but always returning for more.

Their majesties invited only clients of CARMEL TRAVEL to the palace for tea!

KNOW YOUR COUNTY GOVERNMENT

BY WILLARD T. BRANSON Supervisor, Fifth District

THIS WEEK we will speak to one of the more pressing problems, which, while not dealing with a specific department of county government, indirectly involves almost all of county government.

Our good editor tells me that the essence of good communication is to invite participation. In this vein, we will try to outline what is being brought more and more to the attention of the elected officials. So, here goes: why don't we, all of us, address ourselves to the critical question which is facing not only the 5th Supervisorial District, but the Monterey Peninsula totally (including the coast and Carmel Valley), which is that of the eventual holding capacity of our area?

This is a question which has been asked by many of the leading conservationists, as well as much of the general public. And we must face it.

If we can avoid a total state of conflict within our community, between the development interests and the conservationists or preservationists, it should be possible objectively to come to grips with the problem. While much is done through disagreement in our views (as a society), it would appear that we are at that point in time when disagreement should not equate to argument, which could impair our life style, and that our community can, through a concerted effort, come together to find that elusive holding capacity, which, though difficult to define, will allow the majority of our citizens to live in this beautiful area in and with the comfort we want.

Of course, some may have to face changes, great changes, but I, for one, am convinced that we can establish a reasonable holding capacity for our area.

The term safe holding capacity is not necessarily a "total no-growth" attitude, or "no more than now" limit. In San Francisco on June 14 even Gov. Tom McCall of Oregon, who is an ardent advocate of slow-growth, said: "But we've got to have growth -- limited, controlled and circumspect, but growth nonetheless...the achievable balance between unparalleled growth and a pristine environment has not yet been found, but more and more people are asking that it be achieved."

To state it another way, this attitude evolves from that which will allow that number of people in a given watershed or air basin without overloading its own logistical and life support systems. It can well be argued, locally, then, that in at least one instance when a water company overdrafts its existing water supply (if this is a fact) it is affecting the holding capacity.

While it appears on the surface that there is an unresolvable difference between the forces of say; the banker, or real estate person and those who espouse limited growth, they are really saying the same thing, which is: "I like it here, I do not want to despoil the area." A close friend of mine who works within the building trades recently said: "If I had a choice between curtailing my employment in order to be able to go hunting or fishing, I would be willing to make that sacrifice."

Another friend, a teacher said, "I don't want double sessions in the classroom, I want to get away from it all, away from the people and the tensions." I really hear these people saying the same thing, in essence, so why can't we get together?

A good start, in my estimation, would be to do away with "labels" (at least for the time being) such as "conservationist," "builder," "speculator," etc. and work together to establish an imperfect, perhaps, but workable holding capacity. If the average citizen can lend his efforts in a harmonious accord, we can do it.

What happens if we do not assume our own responsibility in this regard? Well, the answer is simple: some one else will do it for us...some outside agency. It is being done all the time.

Do we want some legislator from Inyo County, or San Bernardino County, or federal representatives from Topeka, Kansas to tell us what our holding capacity should be? Example; California's Porter-Cologne Water Quality Act became law on Jan. 1, 1971. In February of 1971, the Central Coast Regional Water Board (of which I am privileged to be a member and present chairman) was the first to enforce this law...where? In Monterey, one of the world's prime scenic areas and tourist attractions.

This was the beginning of the establishment of our holding capacity! The Monterey--Santa Cruz Bi-County Air Pollution Control District was formed during this time. A blue-ribbon citizens committee was appointed, and as a result of their work, we came up with perhaps the most stringent air quality regulations in the state, if not the country. The first action of consequence was to reduce the discharge of particulate matter from one discharger from 1,000 parts per million, to 125 ppm. Another tool has been provided for the ultimate use of working towards an acceptable holding capacity. So you see, it can be done.

We have been fortunate in having more or less locally constituted agencies involved in such actions, but this will not hold true for long.

Some of the zoning regulations and plans which were found to be acceptable 10 years ago are either unacceptable or need modification, now, in order to come into line with a reasonable holding capacity. Especially when we find such edicts as that of the State Water Quality Board when it says that it will limit its 87.5 per cent of state and federal grants in basins where state air quality standards are being consistently violated.

In those basins, furthermore, they will only approve improvements, "only after being assured that the population remains relatively static for 10 years"! William Dendy, executive officer of the State Water Quality Board, states it should be made clear that "we are in the clean-up business, not in land control or population distribution." He stated that "future applications will not get a dime until they meet the regulations." (Thank goodness our South Monterey cities have their grant approvals!)

In this area, we have a plethora of citizen groups who are willing, and have the expertise to come up with a reasonable solution -- The Area Planning Commission, The Sierra Club, The Monterey County Foundation for Conservation, The Monterey Peninsula Chamber of Commerce and Visitor Convention Bureau, the various property owner associations, The League of Women Voters, the unions and, in short, the general public.

A committee should be formed to establish the Monterey Peninsula holding capacity. We will await the public response. This office, for one, will do all it can to help. Will you, all of you? Our only other choice seems to be to turn it over to outside governmental agenices.

The mayor's report

By BERNARD ANDERSON

CARMEL RECEIVED nation-wide publicity when it informed the public the city would not accept responsibility for any accidents resulting from the wearing of spike heels, cracks and crevices and tree roots in our walks notwithstanding.

Now that Billie Jean King has proven to us male chauvinists that women can stand on their own feet (why we ever let Bobby Riggs represent us!), perhaps it's time we took the ordinance off the books.

However, no sooner do we dispose of one safety hazard than we are faced with another. Not it's those narrow racing tires with which the bicyclists equip their bikes. A touring bicyclist showed up at City Hall and informed the city administrator, "I'm not going to sue the city but I think Carmel should be aware that the storm drains your city has on its streets were the cause of my smashing the front wheel of my bicycle. I was riding down Ocean Avenue and hugging the curb to give passing cars good clearance and as I passed over a storm drain my wheel slipped through the cross bars of a drain which runs parallel with the street."

The city has been installing the drains, which are standard for the state, to do away with the uncovered openings to the storm sewers. These openings have served as car traps with bent fenders as the result. Since the drains can't be installed crosswise to the street, they will need to be redesigned and those already installed will need to have welded cross bars.

THE ANNOUNCEMENT of Del Monte Properties to discontinue their sand operations has engendered a lot of speculation among the cities of the Peninsula as to the disposition to be made of the Southern Pacific track right-of-way if train service comes to a halt.

Last week at the invitation of the City of Monterey, a meeting was held with officials of the Southern Pacific and the subject was discussed in detail.

The right-of-way is 100-feet wide with some variation through Cannery Row and roughly on a 1 per cent grade. Since the projected sewage disposal system of Pacific Grove, Monterey, Seaside, Del Rey Oaks, Sand City, Fort Ord, etc., will require connecting lines between the municipalities, the right-of-way would be an ideal location for the sewage line. It could be of inestimable value in avoiding ripping up streets, etc. Carmel's interests parallel the other cities in furthering eventual disposition and reclamation of water. At times consideration has been given to an over-the-hill connection to their projected system.

The gist of the conversations was that the Southern Pacific has no plans to abandon trackage; that a multiple use of present right-of-way, including a sanitary line, would be considered and was feasible.

A suggestion to allow a "Toonerville" passenger operation to assist inter-city transportation drew a positive-negative. Under no circumstances would a mixed freight and passenger service be considered in view of union and common carrier restrictions. Parallel bicycle paths are also taboo based on the impossibility to police movement of the users. Motorcyclists creep in, road crossings take special precautions, cyclists stray onto tracks, etc.

If rights-of-way were disposed of, cities would not be given preference in acquiring the lands. Disposition would be considered jointly by the S.P. Railway Co., the S.P. Land Co., and the S.P. Development Co., in the interests of S.P. stockholders. The company's and the cities' representatives will be continuing further discussions as circumstances develop.

Blood drawing is this weekend

There will be an American Red Cross blood drawing in the Carmel Valley Community Center, Ford Road on Thursday, Oct. 4 from 3 p.m. until 6:30 p.m.

All donors will be given gift tickets to the Community Theatre production of Thornton Wilder's, "Our Town" to be presented at the Pacific Grove Art Center through Oct. 13.

"Under individual coverage, any person donating one pint of blood will receive a card entitling the donor, spouse, minor children, parents, parent-in-law, grandparents, and grandparents-in-law, to an unlimited amount of blood for one year," explained chairman Mimi Weingarten.

"If a group donates during the year, the total group and their families, as explained under individual coverage, are eligible for all the blood they need during the year.

"At our last drawing held in Carmel, donors from all over the Monterey Peninsula were presented with certificates citing them for," Outstanding service to the community through the donation of blood to the Central California Red Cross Blood Center," stated Mrs. Weingarten.

Magic Carpet to expand its offerings

Last year, the Magic Carpet put on a new production every month at the Hidden Valley Theater in Carmel Valley.

This year they plan to expand their production schedule, doing slightly fewer shows, but running each one for at least two weekends at a time, following the lead set by their successful three week-end run of "Alice in Wonderland" last June.

Some of the shows the Carpet has lined up for the year include "Peter and the Wolf," with Hidden Valley musicians, a possible production of "Petrouchka," a new show of plays written by local school-children, and a musical extravaganza of "Wind in the Willows."

The Magic Carpet bills itself as a "fantastical imagin'ry theatrical expedition," and the eight members of the group work hard to live up to the epithet.

Their next production will be "Beauty and Beast" -- the old fairy tale, plus a "Piggy-Wiggy Boogie" (or, "I Got the Big Bad Wolf Blues").

The show opens Friday, Oct. 5 and runs on the week-ends through Oct. 14, at Hidden Valley Theater. Shows are on Friday and Saturday nights at 8 p.m. and Sunday matinees at 2 p.m. Admission price is $1 for children and $2 for adults. Please call 659-3115 for reservations.

Bob Wood reports:

By BOB WOOD
Monterey County Assemblyman

Usually it is our own state of California that takes the initiative on principal issues and in many cases the other states tend to follow.

However, the state of New York has taken the lead in dealing with heroin pushers. The toughest anti-narcotics law in the nation went into operation Sept. 1, 1973 in the state of New York.

New York has long been known as one of the more progressive and permissive states. It has also the unenviable distinction of having one of the highest crime and narcotics rates. New York City alone, it is conservatively estimated, has 125,000 heroin addicts. A new approach was apparently needed. New York has decided to get tough.

The legislature voted into law mandatory life sentences for pushers of hard narcotics. The new law requires anyone convicted of selling one ounce of heroin (or similar hard narcotic) to be sentenced to life inprisonment. No longer will judges have the discretion to let the pusher off "easy".

The convicted pusher will now have to serve a minimum of 15 to 25 years before becoming eligible for parole. And then the only parole possible is parole for life. New York is playing for keeps.

Accompanying these admittedly draconian penalties, the new law provides for 100 additional judges to preside over special "drug courts." The New York Drug Abuse Program has spent half-a-million dollars in their efforts. How it works out will be closely watched byr our Legislature and may well provide a model for the country to follow.

on the town

WHEN I'M REALLY HUNGRY at lunchtime and want a good hamburger at a reasonable price, I go to King's Cross Station in Pacific Grove. Their stationburger can't be beat ... a half-pound char-broiled hamburger on an onion roll. (Unless it's the Crossburger which also has Canadian bacon, blended cheeses.) Both are served with a fine green salad with fresh mushrooms! If you still have room after one of these sandwiches - they also have delicious pecan pie or cheesecake for dessert. There is live entertainment nightly at King's Cross Station.

LORE PILES HER Crab Loui high with all kinds of goodies at The Carriage House on Carmel Valley Road just before the "Village." Besides the delicious morsels of crab over a bed of crisp lettuce, there are tomato slices, beets, eggs and many other surprises in this tasty salad. Starting this week, the Thursday Luncheon at The Carriage House will be extra special.

A favorite for ladies' bridge luncheons will feature Prawns Florentine or your favorite omelette with a choice of soup or salad and beverage plus a generous glass of champagne.

LONG-TIME FAVORITES of not only locals but also visitors to the Peninsula and American troops stationed overseas, Jerry Winters and Sioux Scott bring their top quality entertainment to the Outrigger on Cannery Row every Tuesday through Saturday. I don't recommend their humor to someone with prudish feelings, but by the delighted crowds viewing their show you can tell this duo has many fans. Sioux is a comedienne who can really belt out the songs.

CARMELITES ARE LUCKY to have a charming place to stop for a late lunch...La Playa Hotel serves soups, salads and sandwiches all afternoon. Carmel's earliest hotel by the ocean goes back to the origins of Carmel itself. The sunny gardens, winding staircases and beautiful ocean view from the Sunset Room are all part of the old tradition of this hotel known for the graciousness of it's proprietors "Bud" and "Char" Allen. My favorite at La Playa is their gigantic salads -- definitely a meal in themselves.

THIS IS YOUR last week to see possibly the greatest lounge act the Peninsula has seen. "Sounds of Joy" is winding up their stay at the Holiday Inn, Carmel. Big band trumpet sounds are back with this group and you hear it best in Space Odyssey 2001 and their mini production of "Jesus Christ, Superstar." Joy is seven very talented young people doing the best of "what's happening now" in show and variety dance music. King Herod's song from JC, Superstar is a fantastic parody -- right down to the jazz tap dance!

GUITAR STYLINGS by Pat Briley of "Briley and Branch" at the Holiday Inn, Monterey are really good. Pat has written and recorded 18 songs and appeared in nightclubs throughout the country. The versatility of this group is quite exceptional -- country, blues, jazz or rock - spiced with great audience participation numbers. The Capn's Hook Lounge often seems to be bursting at the seams with this group performing.

MY CHEF OF THE WEEK is Chef Sylvester - going on his 27th year with the Mission Ranch Dining Room. Trained as a school boy, he worked in a hospital and then in the army went to cooking school. One of his specialities is Sole Sylvester en Casserole - over the years the complete menu reflects Chef Sylvester's skill in the kitchen. Your dinner starts off with a jardiniere of fresh vegetables and relishes, hot, crisp garlic French bread, soup du jour and a light salad with choice of dressings. For an entree you might try Chef Sylvester's greatest -- Lobster Thermidor with Sherry or try Filet Tips Saute with mushrooms.

Supervisors form committee on environmental impact reports

By BOB KENNEDY

Environmental Impact Reports, one of the most recent legislative mandates established by the state, are creating questions in Monterey County, and county government isn't sure how to handle them.

County supervisors spent nearly two hours listening to public input, and discussing among themselves and the county counsel who should prepare and submit environmental impact reports (EIR).

Individuals in the audience almost unanimously endorsed recommendations that a third-party system be implemented whereby neither the developer of a proposed development or the applicant prepares the report for county approval.

Tabling the discussion until the problem could be resolved, the board of supervisors agreed to direct the county planning department to form a committee of county officials, private individuals, and groups to study the situation and prepare recommendations for the board to study.

The board acted on a suggestion by Leon Deranleau, president of the Monterey County Foundation for Conservation. He told the board he had some concern about changing EIR procedures and recommended a committee study the situation.

Deranleau added that there should be a fair amount of participation by the developer if the third party system is to be adopted.

County Counsel William Stoffers said a developer is required to submit data for the EIR, but it was up to the county to prepare the final report. He added that there is no legal requirement that a third party prepare the report.

"The best from the technical standpoint," Stoffers said, "but not necessarily from a financial one, is to have the county staff prepare it."

Supervisor Roger Poyner asked Stoffer if the county could be reimbursed from the state for the cost of the preparation of reports since the procedure is state mandated.

"No," Stoffer answered, "I guess we're stuck with it."

Speaking in favor of the third party system was K. J. McGinnis, representing the Carmel Area Coalition. He said: "someone that wants something should have to pay for it."

He added that he could not envision the county having to pay for the costs of preparing an environmental impact study and it should be the developer's responsibility.

Stoffers suggested that the study committee consider input from the planning commission, public works department, health department, air pollution control district, developers, county roads department, the public and other agencies, before acting on any EIR.

He added that the board of supervisors should consider only the facts presented, and not opinions on whether someone "likes it or not."

"The problem in this county is every time someone wants to do something," he said, "someone is against it." But, he added, the attitude is not unique to Monterey County.

Brian Finegan, appearing as an individual, cautioned the board of supervisors on establishing county guidelines.

"I think it would be unwise to make county guidelines until the state prepares their guidelines," he said.

Supervisor Willard Branson agreed with Finegan's suggestion, and added, "we want to wait to take action until state guidelines are adopted."

The state is expected to revise and clarify the present guidelines for EIRs next month. The present mandate has been in use for only the past five months. The guidelines are presently under study by the State Resources Agency.

The study committee to be formed will determine who should prepare and submit an environmental impact study and who to submit it to, and who will act on it.

ELECTED officers of the Carmel Kiwanis Club lined up for the camera Saturday night at Rancho Canada during the annual installation dinner. They are (from left): Dr. Albert Stoesser, second vice-president; Robert Heater, incoming president; Chuck Mitchell, outgoing president; and Dick Nystrom, first vice-president.

BLACK ELECTED

Arthur Black, Jr. of Carmel was elected president and player agent of the Carmel little league at its recent meeting. Others elected were: Don Corona of Carmel Valley, vice-president of senior division; Brian Kelly, vice president of major division; Bob Priestley, vice-president of minor division; Joan Spear, secretary; and Barbara Sanford, treasurer.

Joint Powers Agency tackles the bus business

The Monterey Peninsula Joint Powers Agency for Transportation, fresh from its triumph of continuing Peninsula bus service, now has readied itself to tackle the problems of running what has been a losing business.

At a short 20-minute session on Monday, agency member John Nail convinced the board to embark on a publicity campaign to increase the number of transit users on the Peninsula.

According to a 1972 study on public transportation in Monterey County done by Wilbur Smith and Associates, less than 1 per cent of travel in the county is by public transit.

Even with the hope of increased fares, agency members are considering 25-passenger buses rather than the cumbersome 46-passenger variety as the permanent solution to Peninsula transit problems.

Buses run by the agency began rolling yesterday with no change in the operation of Bay Rapid Transit service. BRT went out of business Tuesday, but will still operate a private charter business.

Free service is being provided until Monday when fareboxes will be installed and buses will run on the same 25-, 35-, and 45-cent fares.

Agency chairman Hugh Bayless reported Monday that he would have a full list of suggested names for the new bus service at Monday's meeting of the JPA.

The buses arrived at Carmel's Sunset Center last week from El Paso, Tex. El Paso City Lines had declared the 13-year-old buses surplus and have entered into a lease-purchase agreement with the JPA.

The agency has set up a temporary office in Sunset Center staffed by a part-time secretary. The phone number of the office is 624-9676.

Faced with rapidly increasing financial losses, BRT President Randall Ward asked for and received a $3,000-a-month subsidy from the agency for the past nine months. But, Ward said in his application to the PUC, the subsidy was not nearly enough to cover operating expenses.

The agency has commissioned a $30,000 study of the Peninsula's transportation needs. Once the study is completed, agency representatives feel certain they will be able to obtain federal transportation grants to allow purchase of new equipment and expansion of service.

The grant application process will delay the ordering of new buses for at least a year however.

The El Paso buses are expected to last the agency for about a year. The BRT buses according to Ward are 20 years old and in need of major overhauls.

Actual cash reserve loss from fares in 1972 for BRT was $17,400, with the blame being placed on decreasing demand for transit, Ward has stated.

BUSES LINE UP outside Sunset Center in Carmel for the start of service this week under the Joint Powers Agency.

Gem and Mineral Society exhibit is Saturday

The Carmel Valley Gem and Mineral Society will sponsor its 14th annual "Jubilee of Jewels" gem show Saturday and Sunday at the Monterey County -rgrounds.

The show will feature a giant emerald cluster weighing 10.5 ounces (1,500 carats), a 10-pound nugget of black jade, gem carvings in carnelian and fire agate, plus hand- engraving and silversmithing by master craftsmen.

Show time will be from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. on both days, with organ music throughout the show, courtesy of Bob Walls of Monterey Music. Admission is 50c, and hot foot will be served all day.

The featured emerald was unearthed by Robert "Red" Reitzel, a prospector and owner of a clothing store, near Newton, Alexander County, North Carolina. It may be the largest ever discovered in North America.

The 10-pound nugget of "King Jade," the rare black variety, will be shown with a suite of other, more conventional green jades by Paul F. Patchick, a geologist from Pacific Grove.

The jade nugget was found by John E. Gilbert Jr. of Big Sur, and is naturally polished by the action of the waves. Other jade from south Monterey County will be displayed.

Local exhibitors include Cal and Betty Keator of Pacific Grove who will show their collection of fluorite crystals; and Sally and Bob Mullnix (show secretary and chairman), who will show their "Gull Island," crafted from silver and gold and made with Wyoming petrified wood, sapphires and tourmalines.

Roscoe M. Russell of Carmel Highlands will demonstrate the art of fine silversmithing. Harold W. Main, an amateur anthropologist from Santa Cruz, will demonstrate the near lost art of Indian arrowhead making. Millie Staples will demonstrate how to facet gemstones; George Staples how to carve semi-precious stones; and A.R. Hutchinson will show lapidists, or would-be rockhounds, how to "cab" a stone (how to make cabochon-shaped stones ready for mounting on a ring).

In 1930 she moved to the Monterey Peninsula living first in Carmel Highlands and opening a medical office over Fortiers Drug Store in Carmel. In 1945 she moved her residence to Camino Real and 15th Avenue. She was a member of the Carmel Art Association.

Pirates sweep to victory over Padres

By DAN HAFSTROM

The Peterson High School Pirates swept to a 14-6 win over the Carmel Padres Saturday afternoon at Carmel High School.

Peterson drove 62 yards in seven plays after the starting kickoff for a touchdown with quarterback Lon Huntington using backs Tim Cady, William Larsen and Mike Gant for fast breaks through the line. Larsen broke through from the Carmel 24 for the touchdown.

The Padres gathered their wits after the fast touchdown and put together a drive that gained four first downs and moved to the eight-yard line. Quarterback Mike Chappell ran to the right side, was tackled, dropped the ball and Peterson recovered to squash Carmel's hopes for an early score.

Peterson continued to hit hard throughout the game, pushing through the Carmel line continually during the first half.

Gant burst through the left side for a 39-yard gain in the second quarter. The Pirates were soon at the Carmel eight-yard line. Huntington passed over the center to end Mike Arroyo in the end zone for a second touchdown.

The Padres got a break in the third quarter after the Pirates failed to make a first down. Jay MacGregor's punt was high, but traveled only about 15 yards downfield and the Padres took possession at the Peterson 46-yard line.

Backs Scott Green, Mike Ford and Chong Chang pushed up to the seven-yard line. Quarterback Brian Hare handed the ball to Ford who dashed around the Padres' stronger right side for a touchdown. Hare attempted a pass to Dave Hunter for the conversion but it was incomplete.

"They were outhitting us the first half," head coach Jason Harbert explained afterwards.

"That's the first club that ran the ball down our throats like that since the Padres played Palma last November," he said. The Padres defeated Palma last year 28-14.

"I watched Carmel at Harbor last week and I was impressed," said Peterson's head coach John Sepulveda. Like Harbert, he anticipated a different type of game. "We were gearing up for passing and this running came up;" he said.

Harbert feels the Padres can gain yardage running and will stay with mostly running plays though he still plans to work toward "a balanced attack."

Carmel will meet Santa Clara High School Saturday at 2 p.m. at Santa Clara. "They're just like Peterson, only better," Harbert said, "they're going to take the ball and try to run it down our throats."

The Peterson junior varsity defeated the Padres JV's 14-0 and the freshmen beat Pacific Grove 22-14.
